We are one day late this week, caused by the non-arrival of the beautiful Holiday covers for The Independent. We did not give up hope of their arrival until Tuesday night, when a representative of this paper had to go to Portland and order paper, borders and cuts suitable for the issue. This has been done at considerable expense, but, though we should have preferred the beautiful covers ordered a month ago, we feel that The Independent this week is a very creditable paper and will be appreciated by its many readers.

Miss Freda Boch, who left for California last week, in company with Miss Marie and John Tunzat, in hopes the climate there would be beneficial to her failing health, died enroute at Tracy, Calif., and the remains were returned here for burial. She was a general favorite with all who knew her and the funeral which was held from the M. E. church on Thursday afternoon, was very largely attended, nearly all her schoolmates being present. There were many beautiful floral tributes, the pure white casket being banked in blossoms. Miss Boch was born in Portland, November 23, 1893, but most of her life time had been spent with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Tunzat, of this city. Interment was in the Hillsboro cemetery.

The development of manufacturing in the United States has been marvelous, both because of its size and because of the swiftness of accomplishment. The earl of Chatham said some 150 years ago that American colonists had no right to manufacture a horseshoe nail. In 1750 the law forbade the erection of an iron rolling mill in America. Even Benjamin Franklin, usually far sighted, said that America could not make manufactures enough to supply herself in 1,000 years. Today our manufacturers have more than four hundred million dollars' worth for export.

The Oregonian and Independent, one year, $2.

We intended this issue of The Independent to consist of 20 pages, but the failure of our colored newspaper covers to arrive has made that impossible and considerable good reading is omitted on that account. They were shipped from the East more than a month ago and should have reached Portland the first of this week at the latest, but are snow-bound somewhere. We regret their non-arrival for they would have made this paper one of the prettiest ever issued in this county. However, The Independent is a pretty good holiday edition as it is, containing much of interest to the general reader, and very much of importance to those wishing to purchase Christmas presents. Our merchants have patronized us liberally this year, have large and well selected stocks to select from and buyers should look over their stocks before going elsewhere. Read every ad. carefully, visit the dealers who have tendered you an invitation to do so, and you will without doubt find just what you want. The Independent is sent to a large number of persons who are not subscribers this week. It does not cost them a cent, and if after reading it over they feel that they would like its weekly visits for a year, send in or bring one dollar. Thanking our patrons for their liberal patronage, as shown in the paper today, we hope they will receive a large share of the trade that the holidays demand.
