

The Waning Hardwood Supply.

Although the demand for hardwood lumber is greater than ever before, the annual cut to-day is a billion feet less than it was seven years ago. In this time the wholesale price of the different classes of hardwood lumber advanced from 25 to 65 per cent. The cut of oak, which in 1899 was more than half the total cut of hardwoods, has fallen off 36 per cent. Yellow poplar, which was formerly second in point of output, has fallen off 38 per cent, and elm has fallen off one-half.

The cut of softwoods is over four times that of hardwoods, yet it is doubtful if a shortage in the former would cause dismay in so many industries. The cooperage, furniture, and vehicle industries depend upon hardwood timber, and the railroads, telephone and telegraph companies, agricultural implement manufacturers, and builders use it extensively.

This leads to the question, Where is the future supply of hardwoods to be found? The cut in Ohio and Indiana, which, seven years ago, led all other states, has fallen off one-half. Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia and Wisconsin have also declined in hardwood production. The chief centers of production now lie in the Lake states, the lower Mississippi valley, and the Appalachian mountains. Yet in the Lake states the presence of hardwoods is an almost certain indication of rich agricultural land, and when the hardwoods are cut the land is turned permanently to agricultural use. In Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi the production of hardwoods is clearly at its height, and in Missouri and Texas it has already begun to decline.

The answer to the question, therefore, would seem to lie in the Appalachian mountains. They contain the largest body of hardwood left in the United States. On them grow the greatest variety of tree species anywhere to be found. Protected from fire and reckless cutting, they produce the best kinds of timber, since their soil and climate combine to make heavy stands and rapid growth. Yet much of the Appalachian forest has been so damaged in the past that it will be years before it will again reach a high state of productiveness. Twenty billion feet of hardwoods will be a conservative estimate of the annual productive capacity of the 75,000,000 acres of forest lands in the Appalachians if they were rightly managed. Until they are we can expect a shortage in hardwood timber.

Circular 116, of the Forest Service, entitled "The Waning Hardwood Supply," discusses this situation. It may be had upon application to the Forester, Forest Service, Washington, D. C.

See It Works.

"We hear it frequently asserted that if persons will impress the thought firmly upon their minds and continue thinking about it until they have fallen asleep when they desire to awake at a certain time in the morning that they will do so, but how many have tried that method of insuring a prompt awakening at a given hour in the morning only to find their rest throughout the night disturbed and uneasy?"

"The brain will usually respond to the will and awaken one in the morning near the desired hour under any circumstances, but to prevent the broken, uneasy sleep the adoption of only a very simple device is necessary. The last thing before getting into bed take a watch or clock and turn the hands to the hour at which one wishes to rise and gaze at this just long enough to fix the hour firmly on the retentive memory. Then, if no other absorbing thoughts intervene between that and the moment one is locked in slumber the night's rest will be easy and unbroken, and promptly at the hour in the morning, as a rule, one will find one's self released from sleep and wide awake. There is no need to keep thinking of the hour continually for a number of minutes, no need to repeat it over and over in the mind; this makes the brain uneasy and results in the disturbed slumber; simply look at the watch or clock as I have indicated and the influence of the mind over matter will be clearly demonstrated in the morning. Try it some night and observe how smoothly this psychological fact works."

Enjoyable at a Distance.

"We would have had a pleasant evening if it had not been for one of the most insufferable little youngsters who was ever allowed to sit up late."
"Why, what was the matter with him?"
"Oh, he is one of those children that say the smart things that tickle us so much when we read about them in the newspapers and that drive us distracted when we have to listen to them!"

Worth the Money.

"So you want to marry my daughter, eh?" queried the stern and wealthy parent.
"I do," answered the young man.
"Are you aware, sir," continued the p. p., "that it cost me more than $15,000 to bring her up and educate her?"
"No, sir," replied the applicant for the job of son-in-law, "but I'm right here to inform you she's worth every dollar of it."—Chicago News.

Ancient Chemistry.

Beyond a doubt the Egyptians knew a great deal about chemistry. This would seem to be proved by their skill in fixing colors and, above all else, by their wonderful art of embalming the bodies of their dead. Without a pretty thorough knowledge of the principles of chemical affinity and combination the Egyptians would never have been able to accomplish what they did in those directions.

When Carlyle Heard Dickens.

April 29, 1863, Carlyle wrote thus of one of Dickens' readings: "I had to go yesterday to Dickens' reading 8 p. m. Hanover rooms, to the complete upsetting of my evening habits and spiritual composure. Dickens does it capitally, such as it is; acts better than any I have seen in the world; a whole tragic, comic, heroic theater visible, performing under one hat and keeping us laughing in a sorry way, some of us thought—the whole night. He is a good creature, too, and makes $50 to $60 by each of the readings."

Rational Dress.

To go up and down stairs without fatigue would be in itself the freeing of thousands of women from an intolerable daily hardship. And it is clothes and not the stairs that cause the trouble, though women do not realize this, as they refuse to make the experiment of trying a different style of clothing. And it is the same with all they do. They talk of freedom and remain bound themselves and as far as possible try to bind others in one of the most harassing forms of slavery that has ever been invented.—Lady Hamilton in Rational Dress Gazette.

A Queer Lizard.

An extraordinary reptile which is described in a book by R. L. Ditmars of the New York Zoological park. A large Mexican horned lizard, excited by an attempt to measure it, emitted a rasping sound and expelled a jet of blood, which struck a wall four feet away and formed a trail of 103 large spots along the floor. The blood came from the eyelid, momentarily much swollen. Shooting blood from the eye has been long attributed to this creature, but it seems so rare that naturalists have doubted its reality.

Mexican Horse Hoofs.

The automobile horn walled mournfully, and the horse began to rear and back.

"Whoa, there!"

The driver pulled a tiny attachment to the right rein and a hood fell from the animal's forehead down over his eyes. Instantly then it became lamb-like.

"A Mexican idea," said the driver. "In Mexico all spirited horses wear these hoods that at the first sign of trouble can be dropped. It is a good thing. It has saved thousands of lives."—Kansas City Independent.

What He Missed.

One of the officials of the Indian office at Washington was a visiting reservation in Montana on government business once when a certain chief who had taken a fancy to Uncle Sam's agents invited him to attend the wedding of the Indian's daughter. The Indian office man was, to his regret, unable to be present at the festivities, but the Indian laconically described the function subsequently in order to indicate what the agent had missed.

"Five dogs," said the chief, "and plenty pie."

The West Indian Tick.

In addition to the mosquitoes infesting certain parts of the West Indian Islands there is a still more disagreeable pest which attacks the unwary foreigner. This is the tick, a tiny insect. The tick hides in the grass and attaches itself to the clothes of persons who walk out of the beaten roads. He burrows in the flesh and makes a very painful spot, which swells and itches exceedingly. Hundreds of ticks have been found on one person, and in some cases the bites have been so severe that a long illness has resulted.—New York Herald.
