A Design That Falled. "One design which the manufactur ers put out for us" said the jeweler, "had a short lived popularity, or, rather, it had no popularity at all. That was the decoration of pins, lockets, allver tollet articles, belt buckles, etc., with women's beads in various styles. Many of them were extremely beautiful and artistic, but they would not sell. Women would not buy them for themselves because no woman cares to an, nor would they buy them as presents for men for obvious reasons. Nelther could a man very well present a woman with an article bearing the head of another woman, so those designs had to be retired or made over."-Tales of the Derby. When the Duke of Queensberry ("Old

Novelists spend a deal of time over their titles. Dickens worked through thirteen before he found the fourteenth "Hard Times." Hamlet's famous in soliloquy, as Mr. Oribbin reminds us, has one sentence that has given three writers their titles. W. D. Howells has employed "The Undiscovered Coun-Robert Barr "From Whose try." Bourne," while David Christie Murray and Henry Herman twist the tail of the quotation by employing "One Traveler Returns." But is the title of such importance? asks the London Chronicle. It is delightful to know that novelists search the Scriptures and read their Shakespeare in the quest for titles. But one recurs to the method of Lytton when he wanted to discover whether his name or his nature was the attraction. Why should not all six shilling volumes be entitled sim-

Catching a Thief. Saindo, one of the cleverest of the Paris detectives, was one day making his round of the Quartier du Temple when he found himself in a group listening to a man selling silver watches for 5 francs each. Saindo bought one and, having assured himself that it was genuine, came to the not unnatural conclusion that these watches could not have been come by houestly. The vender was, however, a giant, and Saindo was by no means blessed with large proportions. He furthermore argued that there were confederates among that group. In a minute or two he had formed a plan. He asked the man to take a glass of wine, saying that he meant to purchase another watch. The offer was accepted, and a second watch was tendered, which Saindo pretended to examine. He, however, suddenly took to his heels, watch in hand. Thereupon the vender pursued, crying:

"Stop thief!" When Saindo got him as far as the "Well, I'm the woman." The man police station, he turned around, clutched the other by the throat and, to the great astonishment of every one, led his captive inside.
