The recent primary election brought a number of surprises, among them the vote for sheriff. ty central committee, and post George G. Hancock received a office address: majority of 345 votes over Buchanan and 534 more than J. C. Kuratli, or 31 votes more than both his opponents. In the county his vote was 848, which is looked upon as phenominal, for it was conceded by his friends that the race would be a neckand-neck affair at best, and the result demonstrates the high esteem in which Mr. Hancock is held. In his home town, Forest Grove, he received 254 of the 281 votes cast, which is certainly a grand endorsement from the people who know him best, and will undoubtedly discourage the candidacy of other aspirants for that particular office.
