A LOST ISSUE.

The republican party has dropped its hue and cry against tariff reform. It realizes that the days of McKinleyism are gone and the illogically of its principles exploded. It can no longer convince a man that to narrow his market is to increase his prosperity and redound to his benefit. Neither can it point to the present stringency as a result of democratic principles, for that is another story. For years and years, while foreign countries have bought our wheat, cotton and livestock, under conditions that curtailed a reciprocal trade, times have been gradually, but surely changing. Europe has been encouraging the raising of such articles in other parts of the world, and she no longer depends entirely on this country's product. Germany and France are beginning to retaliate. A system that protected a few at the expense of the many, which straitened the producers' market and forced a blight on our ship-building and maritime trade, could not always endure. The old and specious plea, that "protection afforded a greater employment and higher wage" when it was notorious that each Cunarder brought, cabin and steerage, hundreds to compete in the field of employment, was a proper conclusion to such a fallacy. The party must now search for a new issue.

The result of such disastrous and protracted legislation is now seen in the manifestation of discontent and bitterness throughout the land. Millionaires have sprung up appallingly, and it is now proportionately hard for producers and laborers to get along. These millions represent years of labor lost by many, found by few, and the condition is deplorable. A government which permits such comparisons to exist has had too much law snatching of uneconomic principles. Give the producer the world for his market to buy and sell, give the people laws monetary that admit not of iniquitous contraction; put the financial basis of the country on its feet, not crutches; divorce the government from banking and the country will be saved from troublous times.

The small quota of senators who defeated a democratic congress in an attempt to introduce thorough tariff reform will step down and out when the constituency elects new members. It is only to be expected that a system of election, such as we have in making senators, should breed such vermin. When the election of a United States senator lies with the whole people, then such flagrant will become less noticeable. A man born rich in this country, is, if he wills it, born to the senate, and it is an outrage and travesty on justice. The masses pay legislators, and legislation and brains, not wealth, should minister to their wants.

Should any of the dwellings situated south of the railroad track, and in the city limits, undergo a fire, it would be a hard matter to get a hose to do effective work in connection at the location of the nearest plugs. As these properties are subject to city tax, it would appear that their owners should have adequate fire protection. Doubtless the council will give the subject early attention.

The Capital Journal, of Salem, is in the field, anti-Dolph. This is a significant fact, as the editor is one of the legislators himself. In a recent editorial the Journal says that Oregon can afford to send no one but a friend of silver to the United States Senate. Verily, the way of Dolph is hard.

When one makes a dollar, some certain part of it should be laid to one side for the traditional rainy day. After awhile, several rainy days can be endured. Keep out of debt and be not too inquisitive about your neighbor's business for these things breed worry and trouble.

If Chas. Foster, ex-secretary of the U. S. Treasury can do as good a piece of financing acting as the adjuster of the Japan-China difficulty, as did he in his conducting the welfare of Fostoria, the city which he founded, he will eternally bankrupt the Orient.

HILLSBORO should have a reading room. A city of this dimension can hardly afford to be without one. It would provide a place where the youth of the city could go for intellectual improvement. There are but few higher educators than public reading rooms properly conducted.

OREGON is ripe for an immigration that will develop her natural resources. For years past the larger per cent. of those coming to this state have not been homeseekers. Wages are what chiefly have been sought. What the state wants is a class of immigrants which will turn productive soil into farms and gardens.

If the silver sentiment should be the cause of the dissolution of republican strength, the people will be aware that a democratic platform plank caused the dissension. The fact, however, that the republicans would embrace democratic doctrine is significant. It shows very plainly that they know when democrats pick a winning card.

THE bankers of New York are endeavoring to have Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle removed. His attitude on the money question evidently does not suit them. The proposed plan would have a trend to create a lower rate of interest by forcing money into circulation, and this is what hurts. They are after his scalp, but will hardly get it.

THE legislature should do something to change the time of tax-paying. It is in the fall that farmers can more readily raise the necessary money for taxes, for then is his harvest complete. At this season of the year his stock is in the best condition for market, and this, in husbandry, is a considerable source for raising revenue. Make the taxes payable in the fall.

THE fight in this state over the United States senatorship will not disrupt the party. Dolph, Tongue and Fulton will all go into the race like enough, and if they do the first named will come out winner. The fight amongst the state press, notwithstanding it is uproarious does no harm. They are not mad, and may be compared to the feline species, plenty of fur flying and caterwauling but somehow the race holds its own.

SENATOR Dolph has come to the scene of conflict. The money that will be used to elect him would be better kept in his exchequer, for future uses. Mammon may influence some, but he is very liable to be elected anyway. It is not a question of what the people want, and never will be under the present system of senatorial election. All possible pressure will be brought to elect Dolph and he and his cohorts are known to be good fighters.

Every man wears a mask to hide his weakness. Behind this impenetrable veil lie grief and exultation, joys and sorrows, love and hatred, and all the latent passions of mankind. Disimulation has become almost hereditary. It is the mask that villains wear to mar the purity of homes and betray innocent childhood and unsuspecting age; to lead astray trusting womanhood and sever family ties. Could others see mankind as it sees itself individually, the human race would be appalled at its blackness.

THE republican party in this state, according to its sponsor and guardian, the Oregonian, is sorely lacking for senatorial timber, there being but one man capable of donning the toga. This sage is the present incumbent, Dolph, and the great paper intimates that the undivided brains of the g. o. p. of Oregon lies enconced snugly under his beaver. It is no matter that Herman or Mitchell are in Congress, as they are but pignies in comparison to the only Dolph, he of beef and brawn—and gold. The Senator should go the gold standard one better and make it brass for that is evidently what he coins when claiming credit for the work inaugurated by his colleagues. However, the republican daily is right. Dolph does lead them all, if but in a gastronomic sense.

BLOCKADES will now be reported on all the transcontinental lines if the storm is very extensive, and eastern mails will be arriving late. The water is never missed till the well runs dry.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 26, 1894.

If proof were needed that the administration stands ready to meet Congress more than half-way on any proposition looking towards currency reform, it was given by the readiness with which Secretary Carlisle agreed to the substitute for his bill proposed by the democratic members of the House Committee on Banking and currency. The principal differences between the substitute and the original bill are, that national banks will have the option of continuing to do business under their present charters until they expire, or of reorganizing under the new law, and that they are only responsible for the redemption of the notes issued to the extent of their quota to the safety fund provided for that purpose.

The bill will probably be further amended before it is brought to a vote in the House, as the present expectation is that a democratic caucus within a few days of the re-assembling of Congress for the express purpose of acting upon the bill and any proposed amendments offered. Chairman Springer, who is in charge of the bill, says: "I feel that most of the objections have been overcome by the substitute, and I think we have a safe majority for the bill." Representative Bland, of Missouri, is one of the democrats who thinks the bill will not pass. He says that he intends to offer a substitute in a bill providing for the issue of coin and coin notes by the government.

Representative Creamer, of Kentucky, who has long ago demonstrated his right to a position in the front rank of the level-headed men of the House, says of the currency reform bill: "There are some things in the measure which I like, and many which I do not approve, but I take the position that if the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the Banking and Currency Committee say that it is a step in the right direction, I am going to vote for it. I think the democrats ought to stand together as a party upon a measure which the administration endorses. I have no idea that the bill will pass the Senate, but I want to see the House do its duty. My idea is, that when, in the last days of the session, when it becomes apparent that there can be no financial legislation, both Houses will agree to a monetary commission, such as I suggested in a bill introduced some time ago."

It is said that Senator Sherman, whose thriftiness has never been excelled by any man in public life, owns one-half of the square of land which a bill introduced by Senator Quay proposes to purchase for $1,000,000 to be used as a site for a residence for the President of the United States. There is no doubt about the President needing a residence, but there is much about the passage of Senator Quay's bill.

President Cleveland returned to Washington from his hunting trip feeling splendidly and loaded with game, which garnished the Christmas tables of his friends. He was delighted with the South Carolinians he met, and expresses the wish that he may again enjoy trips to the same vicinity.

The democrats of the House have no reason to feel ashamed of their record and work during the first three weeks of the session. They have passed three of the regular appropriation bills and a number of minor bills and have devoted five days to a discussion of currency reform.

Some of ex-Speaker Reed's close friends say that he considers himself far in the lead in the race for the republican Presidential nomination, and that he has no fear of either Harrison or McKinley, but thinks he may be defeated by some dark horse, such as Senator Allison or Gov. Morton. Democrats would rather that any of the three first-named be nominated, had they any say in the matter. Either would be easier to beat than Allison or Morton, because of enemies in their party.

Chairman Wilson, of the Ways and Means Committee of the House expects that his bill for the repeal of the differential duty imposed on sugar imported from those countries which pay an export bounty, will be reported to the House and passed soon after the recess. This is the duty that Germany claims to be in violation of "the most favored nation" clause of the treaty with this country, and which many believe to be partially, if not wholly, responsible for the action Germany has taken and has caused Denmark to take against American meat. There is little doubt that this bill ought to speedily become a law, but, as Senator George said of what the Senate would do after the recess, "the business transacted will be what a small minority of this body decides it shall be."
