DRYDEN

Rufus McKinney and wife have been camping up the creek for some time and are thinking of staying here for the winter. Mr. McKinney has his panther dogs here, and we are all in hopes he will stay and keep the panther and other wild animals out of the valley.

A week ago a panther was heard screaming in the hills near here, so Mr. McKinney, with his dogs, and accompanied by Clarence Shearer, Will Auslund, Walter Minthorn, and Harry Thomas, took lanterns and guns, and ventured forth into the black night to capture Mr. Panther, and although they succeeded in freeing him two or three times, they did not get him, as he was afraid of the lights.

Charles Mastin, from Valley, Idaho, is here visiting with his mother, Mrs. H. S. Mastin, and his brother, Will Mastin.

Mr. Taylor, a former resident of this place, was here over Sunday visiting with friends and attending to business.

There were a few auto loads of men driving around the valley last Tuesday, canvassing for the democratic party and advertising the democratic rally that was held Tuesday night at the grange hall. Among the parties were some prominent Grants Pass men, Druggist Slover, Joe Russell, Dr. Sweeney, and W. T. Miller.

Clarence Messenger spent a few days the first of the week attending to business in Grants Pass.

Will Auslund and wife were in Grants Pass Monday and Tuesday attending to business.

THE PEASANT'S RIDDLE.

And How the Sicilian Kept the Promise He Made to the King.

A Sicilian laborer told us this story. He says his mother told it to him when he was a child. It sounds like one of Grimm's tales and is undoubtedly very old folk lore.

"My mother told me that once there was a king who saw a peasant working in a field and asked him how much he earned. And the peasant said, 'Four carlini a day.' 'What do you do with your 4 carlini?' asked the king. 'One I eat, the second I put at interest, the third I return, and the fourth I throw away.' This puzzled the king, and he asked the peasant what he meant. And the peasant said:

"I buy my food with one. I feed my children with the second, and that is putting money out at interest. I feed my old father with the third, and that is paying back what has been given me. I give the fourth to my wife, and giving her money is throwing it away."

"That's a good riddle," said the king, "and I must tell it to my friends. Promise me that you won't tell any one the answer till you have seen my face a hundred times." So the peasant promised, and the king went back to his palace and asked them the riddle. Nobody could answer, but one remembered seeing the king talk to a peasant, so he went to the peasant and asked him about it. But the peasant said: "I can't tell you. I promised the king I wouldn't tell the answer till I had seen his face a hundred times."

"Oh, that's easy," said the king's friend, and he took a hundred lire out of his pocket, and every piece of money had the king's face stamped on it.

"So the peasant told the king's friend the answer to the riddle, and the king's friend went back to the palace and said to the king, 'I can guess your riddle now,' and he did. Then the king became angry and said: 'You couldn't have guessed it. That peasant has broken his promise!' So the friend had to tell the king how he had fooled the peasant."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Mistake Corrected.

"I hear your newly married daughter and her husband are going to live with you."

"That's a mistake."

"A mistake? I heard it from good authority."

"A mistake, all the same. They are not going to live with me. They are going to live on me."—Baltimore American.
