HISTORICAL FLAGS ARE ON DISPLAY In these days when Old Glory is taking on a new significance, J. B. Caldwell, of the Bijou theatre, has brought forth a trio of banners about which centers a great deal of interest and of the high lights of American history. One is a large flag that was first raised in Canyonville, in Douglas county, in 1861. It was obtained by the citizens there during the early days of the civil war, and was kept flying during the troublous times of civil strife. It was first floated to the breeze by Joel Thorne, father-in-law of Mr. Caldwell. It was half-masted at Canyonville when President Lincoln was assassinated, and again when President Garfield was the victim of a murderer's bullet. At Walsburg, Wash., Mr. Caldwell brought out the cherished banner and it floated at half-mast when President McKinley was struck down by the assassin. This flag was hand-made, the stars, of which there are 34, being sewed in after the blue field was cut away. Another flag valued by Mr. Caldwell is an ensign that was floated over one of the boats captured by Dewey at Manila and converted into a U. S. gunboat for duty on the Pasig river and in Manila bay. Mr. Caldwell was a lieutenant with Co. K, 1st Washington regiment, when the flag came into his possession. A third flag is a confederate banner that was in Stonewall Jackson's brigade just previous to the closing of the civil war. The flags are on display at the theater where Mr. Caldwell says that school children or others who desire may see them at any time during the day that they wish.

Man proposes, but woman steps in and does the rest. Wealth and happiness are not always on speaking terms. Burns' Best Poem. It is said that a boy was once asked in the poet's presence which of Burns' works he liked best. After taking thought with himself for a little he declared that he liked the "Cotter's Saturday Night" by far the best, "although," he added, "it made me greet (cry) when my father bade me read it to my mother." This statement seemed to impress Burns, for presently he said to the lad, "Weel, my callant (boy), it made me greet, too, more than once when I was writing it by my father's fireside." Five hundred pounds are counted to a bale in the usual "tables" relating to cotton. London's streets, laid end to end, would reach from New York to San Francisco.
