ASHLAND SCOUTS SIDE-STEP LOCAL BASEBALL PLAYERS

The Grants Pass Boy Scouts think they made a mistake in practicing baseball in the park at Ashland. Their practicing was witnessed by some of the Ashland boys. Up to that time there had been a lot of good natured jolly between the boys of the two towns over the ball game scheduled for the afternoon.

But when the hour arrived, not an Ashland scout was to be found. They forfeited the game by non-appearance.

The Grants Pass boys were camped for three days in one of the best locations in Lithia park, just below the camp of Company I, Oregon militia. All report having had a most enjoyable outing.

BOY SCOUTS ARE CAMPING ON SUMMIT MT. ASHLAND

Twenty-two Grants Pass lads are camping tonight near the summit of Mt. Ashland.

Leaving their camp in Lithia park at 4:30 this morning under the leadership of Prof. Irving Vining they started on the 14-mile hike to the top of the mountain, each boy carrying two blankets and enough eatables for four meals. They were divided into squads of five each, under a leader of their own selection and will mess and bunk in squads. A camp fire will be kept going all night, one or two hours of the night being assigned to each squad as its "camp fire duty."

The boys will return to Ashland Saturday afternoon in time to catch the evening train for Grants Pass.

NONE CONSCRIPTED WILL JOIN REGULARS

San Francisco, July 6.—That not a single soldier conscripted into active service under the selective draft will be assigned to the regular army, and that for the duration of the war, the regulars will be made up exclusively of men who voluntarily enlist, is the understanding here of army officers.

Also it is the understanding that final discharges of men clearly will show whether they volunteered in the first place or were conscripted, because all conscripted soldiers will get discharges that will read that they did their "bit" in the national army, which will be purely a conscript army.

AMERICAN CHEMISTS.

Some of Their Big Achievements in the Industrial World.

In chemistry, as in other practical matters, Americans have had the wisdom to direct their energies to the special needs and opportunities of their country. For instance, they have built up the greatest sulphuric acid industry in the world. And they have given so much attention to sulphuric acid simply because it is a prime requisite for our superphosphate fertilizers, our petroleum refining, our explosives for blasting and the numerous other substances of which the United States is the leading producer.

Similarly American chemists originated and developed the largest aluminum industry in the world, which supplies us with that lightest of all metals in ever increasing quantities. They built up from its very inception the largest calcium carbide industry which furnishes us that new chemical for producing acetylene light and which, mixed with oxygen, permits us to weld and cut metals by means of a burning jet of oxyacetylene—an entirely new way of cutting steel—melting it like butter, instead of slowly cutting or sawing it by mechanical devices.

They built up the largest electrolytic soda industry, in which the powerful electrolytic current decomposes common kitchen salt and sets free that greeny gas chlorine as well as caustic soda. The public hardly knew this chlorine gas before its horrible use in compressed, liquefied condition for trench warfare in the asphyxiating gas bombs. Its splendid uses for peace, as a purifier of our drinking water supplies, as an antiseptic and as a bleaching agent were hardly ever spoken of. As to caustic soda, it is the base of soapmaking, of mercerized cotton goods, of soda pulp for our paper supplies, and it has endless other uses in chemical industries.

Our chemists were instrumental in providing us with the largest sulphite cellulose industry, whereby wood is changed into the raw material from which paper is made, and with our immense petroleum refining industry—a succession of chemical treatments and chemical processes. Another American chemical industry is the manufacture of synthetic abrasives, striking improvements over the grinding materials found in nature.

We owe to an American chemist the production of artificial graphite, one of the very essentials of the electrochemical enterprises in which the United States is a pioneer as well as a pace-maker, for graphite "electrodes" and graphite "leaders" are the very entrance doors through which the electric current flows into electric furnaces or electrolyzers whenever the use of metals is impossible.—L. H. Backeland in Harper's Magazine.
