Some Irish Families.

It is a notorious fact that many of the families of Ireland which have come to be regarded as typically Irish are of alien extraction. Thus the Plunketts are of Danish origin, the Burkes, Dillons, Roches, Husseys and all the tribe of Fitz are Anglo-Norman, while the Mitchells are English.—London Spectator.

Joy Theatre

THURSDAY and FRIDAY

Jesse L. Lasky presents the charming and gifted FANNY WARD in

"The Winning of Sallie Temple"

Based upon Rupert Sargent Holland's celebrated novel, Sallie is pursued by Duke of Chatto, who attempts to kidnap her. How she is saved—how Pump Lane is freed from the Duke Chatto's heavy taxation and how Lord Romsey finally wins the heart of the young actress makes a story unusual in its theme and rapid in its action.

Clothes may not make the man, but they contribute about as much as any other one factor to his success. Nothing Succeeds like Success. A slovenly appearance is a far worse handicap to business men than a scarcity of capital. A prosperous appearance is half the battle.

Quits So.
A Washington clubman finds a certain fellow member irritatingly optimistic at times. With this chap every disagreeable thing has its compensations, a principle he never fails to give expression to whenever opportunity offers itself.

"How are you this morning?" asked the optimistic person as he encountered his friend in the breakfast room.

"I had a miserable night," said the other. "I never suffered so in my life."

The optimist reflected, "Huh! That's bad! But," he added, brightening up, "you must remember that a bad night is better than no night at all!"
