MAN POWER

Germany must count on her boys and old men to maintain her army up to its present quota.

The flower of her young manhood, aggregating about 5,750,000 men were called to the colors in 1914.

Making allowance for the wounded that have returned to the front and for the calling out of the classes of 1919 and 1920, a total of 700,000, experts figure that Germany's present man power is about 6,800,000 of whom 5,500,000 are available for service at the front.

The real prime manhood of Germany's army has either been killed off or become wearied by the long drawn out war and the unfulfilled promises of an early and victorious peace.

While all these facts are known to the allies, no one who is well informed of all the conditions, looks for a break in the Teutonic fighting machine for another year at the earliest.

It is not the part of wisdom, as many newspapers of the country have been doing, to predict an early fall of the German machine.
