

MOVIE NEWS NOTES

If the name of Goldwyn has not been popularized long before this "The Cinderella Man," Mae Marsh's latest picture, adapted from Edward Childs Carpenter's charming sentimental comedy, would turn the trick with ease, for it is the most delightful comedy drama the writer has had the good fortune to see in many a long month. In point of drama it is simplicity itself, but the romance of Marjorie Caner and her Cinderella Man is so prettily set forth and benefits so largely by the performance of Miss Marsh that each scene is a single joy in itself—the whole a bubbling container of comedy, sentiment and heart interest.

Miss Marsh's quaintly appealing delineation of the star part is certainly the best thing she has yet done for Goldwyn. She brings to the role that almost eloquent personality which with her inborn ability turns the most commonplace of things into colorful incidents that charm. George Fawcett, as the thick skinned old Caner whose attention is at first divided only between his stomach and his business, contributes one of the most effective comedy characters the screen has ever seen. Tom Moore in the title part and Alec B. Francis as Romney Evans, the legal adviser or the Caners, give superlative accounts of themselves, while the support is from first to last of an unusually high order.

REXALL STORES AID NAVAL RECRUITING

In the window of the Clemens drug store there is displayed a double-page advertisement from a current issue of a great national weekly that brings the war on the sea directly home to this section, and to the store where the advertisement appears. The proprietor of the store has a personal interest in the advertisement also, for it relates to war work that he is doing for the government. Furthermore, he helped pay for it—and the cost of the "ad" for the single issue was $10,000.

The advertisement asks for 50,000 men, between 21 and 30, for service in the new merchant marine. In the language of its headline, it offers "50,000 jobs at sea" to clean-cut young Americans.

The advertisement relates further that "the Rexall Stores throughout the United States, nearly 7,000 of them, have been designated by the government as enrolling stations for the U. S. shipping board."
