Sunk to Check Foo.
"With three or four warring parties jealously eyeing the British ships and stores and the Toovaristchi (comrades) airing their new gospel to the British crews of the submarines on every occasion, and with the absence of law and order in Helsinki, opportunities for every kind of trouble were plentiful, and extreme tact and firmness were needed to bring things to a successful issue. As a result, not a single ounce of any kind of metal—British property, some of it priceless nowadays here—will ever fall into human hands, either those of the Huns or the White Guards or the Finnish Red Guards, or Russian Toovaristch. All seven submarines, the repair-shop barge, and every scrap of stores lies safely in minutely disintegrated form at the bottom of the Baltic."

"In charge at Helsinki was Lieut. Commander Downie. The task of destroying some £3,000,000 worth of British Government property to save it from the Germans, who had already landed at Hango, was his last sad duty. Plans for the private sale of enormously valuable stores of all kinds—metals and composites, electric fittings, etc.—were canceled when it was discovered that arrangements existed whereby all such matters of priceless value to the enemy were to be handed over to the Germans wherever found. It was decided to put British property to the bottom."

"That fraction of the British navy which was under Russian orders in the Baltic consisted of submarines, which I will call (because these were neither their letters nor their numbers) Alpha 2, 10, 11, 20, and 21 and Beta 29, 30, 33, and 36. The Alpha class was fairly large, carrying thirty-odd men. The Beta was an older type, with about half that number."

Italian detachments are pursuing the enemy east of the Piave. Austrians left to cover the army's retreat used machine guns to set up a strong barrage.

Washington, June 24—Confidence at Rome that the war may be brought to a conclusion this year if the allies give the Italians full measure of support in the offensive now begun, is reflected in official dispatches from Rome today. Information from secret sources says that many divisions of German troops have been detached from the French front and are being rushed to aid the Austrians.

Here is an opportunity for each to share in the joy of service; as important as the service rendered by the man at the front.

Save and Lend Your Savings
