A Real Compliment.

Billy Sunday has had many compliments, but the one he prizes most dearly came to him, oddly enough, from a criminal's lips.

It was in Philadelphia. Sunday had visited Moyamensing prison. There he had talked with a housebreaker so convincingly that the man had promised to lead, on his discharge, a Christian life.

This housebreaker, discussing Sunday with a guardian afterward, said: "He came in here, Sunday did, and he fairly turned me inside out—made me sick of myself, that's what he done. Oh, he's a winner. I think he's one of us—one of the gang—reformed, you know."

SHEEP REQUIRE LITTLE CARE

Big Value of Wool and Mutton Gives Boost to Industry—Business Now in New Light.

Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The development of the sheep industry will contribute materially to the nation's food and clothing supply. War conditions have brought about a renewed interest in sheep growing in the United States and the high value of both wool and mutton will place the farm sheep business in a new light.

The mutton sheep is a necessary instrument in highly intensive and self-supporting agriculture. The still more intensive use of land in farms, an effort to secure the more economical use of every acre, every facility, and available labor, all of which are necessary under the present conditions, necessitate the general inclusion of sheep in our system of mixed farming and live stock production. This gives the raising of sheep a new appeal in older farming areas.

The main factor in determining the cost of other animal products is the value of grain and mill feeds; pasture and roughage are important, but both beef and pork require a considerable use of concentrated feeds. The production of lambs and mutton require a very much smaller proportion of fat and therefore a smaller use of grain than is required in these other meat animals. Sheep are able to get a good portion of their feed from rough, permanent grass pasture and at the same time keep it clean of weeds. This increases rather than decreases the cattle-carrying capacity of the pasture. As sheep require comparatively little of the owner's labor, the labor cost per dollar's worth of wool or lambs is lower than in any other farm animal product. While the labor required in raising sheep is not heavy it is continuous and somewhat different from that required in the care of other stock.

Many of the obstacles that have hindered the progress of sheep raising in intensive farming districts have been or are being overcome. The competition given sheep growing on farms by the production of sheep on lower-priced range land is being removed. A second but only temporary obstacle to a quick increase in sheep production lies in the fact that comparatively few farmers are as well qualified to care for sheep as for other classes of stock. The needs and habits of sheep differ from those of horses and swine, but present no problems that will not be met by interested study and observations supported by satisfactory returns.

GOOD TEAMS ARE VALUABLE

Mean More to Up-to-Date Farmer Than is Generally Believed—Plan to Raise Cattle.

Good teams mean more to the up-to-date farmer than is generally believed. Without good teams it is a very difficult matter to do good farming. But at present prices farmers may hesitate to buy heavy draft horses and mules, notwithstanding the fact that they are after all economical. It would be a good plan to get some heavy mares and raise colts for sale or to take the place of lighter animals and old teams on the farm.

CARE FOR FARROWING SOWS

No Feed Should Be Given for Twenty-Four Hours—She Must Have Water at Frequent Intervals.

The sow should have no feed whatever for 24 hours after farrowing. She must have water at frequent intervals; that drawn directly from the well is about the right temperature. Increase the feed gradually for ten days, when she may be got onto full feed.

OLD MOUNT IN FRANCE

Major Now Estrides Horse He Rode on Mexican Border.

Maj. Curtis G. Redden, with the One Hundred Forty-ninth Artillery regiment in France, has written relatives at Danville, Ill., that he has just received his saddle horse which he had two years ago on the Mexican border.

When the Rainbow division sailed for France the horses belonging to the Danville battery were left at Newport News, Va., in care of a detail of men from the battery. Only a short time ago the animals were sent across. The men arrived at the landing place, and the sergeant in charge hurried to get into communication with Major Redden.

The letter was somewhere on the American front, but the soldier kept trying until he was able to find him and then reported that the long-lost horses were in France, ready for action, and that among them was the one ridden by the major in Texas. It had been returned to Danville, kept there until the battery was called to the colors again, and then sent to Newport News.

"If the horse comes through this war and I survive, I am going to buy him and bring him home," the major concluded.

"Jingo."

"Jingo" is used as a substitute for something else, as in the phrases "By George" and "By Jinniny." In Goldsmith there is the expression, "by the living Jingo." "Jingo" was originally applied in Great Britain to anyone who advocated an aggressive or vigorous policy in foreign affairs, and came into existence as a nickname for a supporter of Lord Beaconsfield's action in sending a fleet to Turkish waters to oppose the Russian advance in 1878.

She Earned It.

My little daughter came in with a penny. I asked her where she found it, and she said: "I earned it. You see, Carter called me a bad girl and I was going to fight him, but he had some pennies, so I told him if he would give me a penny I wouldn't fight him—and he did."
