THE ALLIED LEADER

The turning of Germany's supreme offensive into a crushing defeat is a personal triumph for General Foch. The generalissimo of the allied armies has now fully justified his right to command, as the foremost military experts of France, England and America believed he would.

Never was there a more severe test of military patience than that endured by Foch through the long gloomy weeks when Germany was dealing blow after blow, and the allied armies were yielding mile after mile of precious territory, without ever striking an effective blow in return.

Time and time again it was expected that Foch would launch a counter drive. He was known to be an offensive fighter by instinct and profession. Yet he remained steadily on the defensive. In the fourth German drive observers almost everywhere hoped and believed that he would throw his "army of maneuver" against a flank of the big salient created by the advance of the crown prince toward Paris, between the Marne and the Aisne. Nothing happened, except the gradual tightening and stiffening of the defensive lines.

We know now, or suspect, that Foch had no "army of maneuver." He did the only thing he could do, with the material at hand. That Hun advance must have been more intolerable to him than to any other man in France. But he endured it, with silent patience.

At last his opportunity arrived. With a million Americans added to his forces, and the Kaiser's army weakened by the steady drain of previous drives, Foch made his plans and bided his time. His previous strategy had lured the enemy into a false sense of security. The Germans thought he would not, or could not, do more than try to stem their own advance, as before. Then, at the strategic moment, Foch struck like a thunderbolt.

The German drive is stopped. It seems safe to say that the whole German offensive which began last March is ended. The Hun army is still big and strong, but not big and strong enough to work its will in France and Flanders. Its reserves are used up. Its morale has sunk to a low ebb. The prestige of its commanders has waned. The German people, when they learn how their "peace offensive" was shattered, will never again dare to hope for a victorious end of the war.

This glorious result is due to Ferdinand Foch more than any other man. It gives him enormous prestige. He is now the biggest military figure in the world, enjoying the unlimited confidence of hundreds of millions.

1919 MODEL CHEVROLET
SAME AS 1918 MODEL

Salesmen, district managers, and traveling representatives from all points in the west gathered at the convention of Chevrolet employees which met at the big factory at Oakland last week to discuss business conditions generally and hold the get-together sessions which are an annual feature of the California motor concern.

The most important item of business announced was the price raise which is imminent for the famous Chevrolet "490". It was stated the popular car would be advanced $50 on August 1, and at the same time it was officially declared that no change in model was contemplated. The present construction of the car has been entirely satisfactory, as is attested by the increased demand for the product, and Chevrolet engineers feel they are giving the public just what it wants. Vice President R. C. Durant presided at the business sessions, and President Norman DeVaux and Assistant Sales Manager Steve were also active participants in the various meetings. 22

AT THE MOVIES

Beautiful Elsie Ferguson in the Artercraft picture, "The Song of Songs" will be the attraction at the Joy theatre on Wednesday and Thursday. It is adapted from Edward Sheldon's play, which proved a sensation at the Elitine Theatre, New York, several years ago.

As a vehicle to exploit the great dramatic ability of Miss Ferguson, "The Song of Songs" should prove her most effective motion picture play since her advent to the screen, providing melodramatic situations of great intensity. As Lily Kardos she plays the part of a girl who is left penniless and alone, and is gifted with unusual beauty. Her struggle for a livelihood amid the temptations strewn in her path develops a very human role, and reveals the injustice of man who, in the pursuit of his own selfish pleasures has no regard for innocence or purity, but who demands it in sanctified form in the woman who is to share the more or less uncertain honor of his name.
