

AT THE MOVIES

The next time you go to the Grand Canyon in Arizona, take along the family clothes line and when you get there tie it from one precipice to another deviously and back to a high escarpment again and then proceed to climb it up an down. If possible secure the services of a pretty, sixteen-year-old girl with blond curls and a haphazard smile, and save her from the Hopi Indians by carrying her on your back as you go hand over hand several hundred feet on your rope, while the canyon yawns beneath you.

In case you don't care for this form of winter exercise, the next best thing you can do is to sequester enough jitneys to take you to the Joy theater Wednesday night, where "A Modern Musketeer" is showing. That's the name of Doug Fairbanks' newest Aircraft film piece. Doug is ordained through pre-natal influence—whatever that is—to be so chivalrous and heroic that he saves fair maidens right and left, to the distress of most of them and the high amusement of those who are privileged to see him do it on the screen. In the doing Mr. Fairbanks gets away with ten or a dozen hair-breadth stunts such as the mind of normal man never conceived. And does he win the sixteen-year-old blond pippin in the end? Well, if you were the girl, what would you say?

SOLDIER LETTERS

Edwin Bobsten Witnesses Destruction of Gestner Field
Aug. 6, 1918.

My Dear Mother:
This morning when we got up the sky was entirely overcast and about 8:30 it started to rain and blow. It's 3 p. m. now and it is simply blowing a gale. I went up to the canteen about an hour ago and a couple of times the wind was so strong I couldn't move. I saw it blow one fellow into a ditch with about three feet of water in it. On one side of our barracks is a railroad track and above us at one side of the Q. M. warehouse there were a couple of freight cars. Well, about a half hour ago they came past here gaining speed all the time, the wind was blowing them along. I don't know when I've see such a bad storm. About 10 days ago we had a bad electrical storm that struck one of the hangers setting it on fire. However there was very little damage done. They have just ordered all the cadets out of their barracks. They are afraid one of the large 150-foot water towers will blow over.

7 p. m., Aug. 6.
Little did I think when I quit this letter that by this time tonight Gestner Field would be almost wiped off the map. Oh, mother, it has been awful. The wind just ripped and tore up all the hangers smashing and destroying all the planes. I doubt if we have three good ships on the post. Every building on the post suffered some damage and lots of them were blown away. We don't know what they will do with us but we will probably be moved away within a week. This field I don't think will ever be rebuilt. There are millions of dollars worth of damage done. Most of we officers were out after the wind died down some, and looked for the injured. As yet we haven't a casualty to report, but the hospital is full. Everyone was all packed up in case our barracks started to go. One whole section of the cadets barracks is caved in and aeroplanes are scattered everywhere. Autos were overturned and ripped up and in all my life I never hope to see such a sight. Several men were blown out in the field and couldn't get back. I don't know what the papers will say, but I'll send you a copy tomorrow. We have no lights or water tonight. It certainly was horrifying to see and hear big sections of roofing torn off and smashed into some other obstacle. You folks can't begin to imagine what it was like. As soon as I find out definitely what I am going to do I will let you know.
With love,
EDWIN.

Seemingly Small Sacrifices Are Apt to Appear to Be Too Trivial

By HARRISON RHODES, of the Vigilante

Do Your Best, but Don't Neglect Your Bit.
There has been no better motto invented for war time than our American variation of the English phrase—we say:
Don't Do Your Bit. Do Your Best.
But we must watch out how we carry out even the instructions of a good motto. As the wave of patriotism rises some people grow impatient of the small things they find to do as their part in the war. They feel that they would be capable of the great sacrifices and the great heroisms. They want to go to France. They want to give and do their all. But when they cannot they sometimes give and do nothing.
It is so hard to believe that a bit is your best. Don't believe it—it is probably only your best for the time being. But do it.
We are already beginning to realize that the heroism of the stay-at-home is often dull, unromantic and hard to achieve. Do the big things if you can; be gallant and reckless and make your whole country proud of you. But if you cannot, do the small things; be patient and cheerful and make your neighborhood glad you live there.
