GERMAN DREAMS

Germany dreamed not only of military but also commercial world supremacy. When she wakes up to what has really happened she may wish she had died in her sleep.

Before the war she controlled the dye market, the potash supply, great exportations of sugar and coal and of drugs and glass and fine steel products. She possessed mining interests in Australia and America whence came much of the raw material needed for the manufactures which were so important a part of her foreign trade.

Now where does she stand? She has lost the dye market, and America not only makes her own dyes but supplies Germany's former customers. We make our own glass and drugs. Potash fields have been found here, while the source of German supply in Alsace-Lorraine will revert to France.

When Germany tries to re-enter the commercial world, she will find herself hated, her foreign holdings gone, the demand for her wares greatly diminished and raw materials difficult to obtain.

Truly a rude awakening from her dream of empire, to appear a beggar and despised when she had thought to rule, but Germany had it coming.

"Between the optimist and pessimist The difference is droll. The optimist the doughnut sees, The pessimist the hole."
