AMERICAN PATROL BOATS ON THE RHINE PAINTED GRAY

With the American Army of Occupation, Feb. 1.—The Rhine fleet of American patrol boats has donned the color of battle gray. The first of the fleet to appear on the river in its new color was the flagship, The Prussian, known as "The General's Ship" and used by General Dickman, commanding the Third army, when he wished to cruise up or down the Rhine.

SOLDIER LETTERS

U. S. S. Jason
January 8, 1919

Dear Mother:

All the flags are at half mast today, and all the ships and forts fired 21 one minute guns at noon for "Teddy." I saw a piece in the paper about the transport service so I am sure it will be alright for me to tell you something about our trips. It's sure some job. We come into the dock, tie up, and then clean ship. Next 3,440 soldiers come aboard. All their outfits are stored in the hold of the ship. It was work from the time they came till we sail. Some dark night or just before dawn we just slip quietly out and down the bay we go.

When we get to the light ship gun crews go on watch. Then the fun starts. Four on and four off. Every little smoke, light or oil on the water that was seen, out comes the gun crew. Oh, we were dressed alright, for no duds were taken off from New York to Brest. One time I did though, when we were coming back. I was going to take a bath. Just ready, general quarters sounded. I put on a pair of trousers and that was all. Out I went onto the bow of the ship with the ship making 22 knots through an April wind. Nice and warm—well I should say not. We had some nurses on board and after about 20 minutes one of them came and gave me her cape. What we saw was smoke, and the boat turned out to be a tramp ship.

While we are at the guns the rest of the crew are busy getting the soldiers up to the life boats and rafts and getting the boats ready to swing off. All this, if it is at night, is done in the dark as no lights must burn. The only lights are on the gun sights and can only be seen about 20 feet.

For eight days that was what we did no matter how much fog, rain or rough weather. I tell you old Brest, France, looked good and New York looked better, for at Brest we unloaded troops, baggage and mail in about 20 hours, and when darkness came out we would go. The nice part of it in New York was that we stayed five or six days.

I was figuring up how many days I was in port from March 7th, until July 4th. We were 25 days in New York and 11 in Brest, the rest of the time we were at sea.

Some think the navy had it easy in the war. Well, it was not so hard on our ship for she is a fast one, but what of the one on the ships that took 12 or 15 days. One soldier made the remark, "I would rather be a soldier for he can see what he is up against. A sub is not much of a thing to see and one don't know where he will go if a torpedo should hit the ship," then there is the fog to cause the ship to go aground, the heavy sea to make us sick.

Well, we got them over there and now we are bringing them back. We did not get to fight many Huns, but that was not our fault for they had a big yellow streak, or maybe they had too much sense to give us very many chances at them. I told you before about the sub firing on us and the fight we had with the one I sent the picture of.

Must close as the lights go out at 9. Love,
R. V. SWINDEN,

WILLINGLY GAVE UP WEALTH

Dr. Remsen, Discoverer of Saccharin, Was Satisfied That Its Use Was Injurious to Health.

A romantic history is attached to the discovery of saccharin. The discoverer of the chemical derivative of coal tar, to which the name saccharin is popularly given, is Dr. Ira Remsen, chief consulting chemist of the United States department of agriculture.

He was at first very enthusiastic as to the possibilities of this artificial sweetstuff, which has a sweetening power about 500 times that of sugar. Its manufacture was organized on a large scale, and soon enormous quantities were being used in making ice-cream and the soda water syrups to which Americans are addicted.

Doctor Remsen was making an income of something like $100,000 a year from his shares in the company when about five years ago his friend, Doctor Wylie, head of the United States pure food bureau, suggested a doubt of the wholesomeness of saccharin.

Doctor Remsen thereupon submitted himself to rigorous tests of the action of saccharin on the digestive organs and on the heart. As a result he asked the department to issue an order prohibiting its use as a food-sweetener.
