THE SENATE AND THE TREATY

In view of the hostility shown in the United States senate toward the work of the peace conference in general, and the league of Nations plan in particular, many people are wondering what the senate will do with the peace treaty when it gets it.

William Hard, writing in the New Republic, suggests that the senate will do with that document just what it did with the bill appropriating $100,000,000 to keep the liberated people of Europe from starving.

The senate debated that food bill for six solid days. Senatorial remarks inspired by it, says Mr. Hard, filled 239 columns of the congressional record, not counting 13 columns of statistics furnished by Senator La Follette on the union scale of wages and hours in the North Atlantic states for asbestos workers, composition roofers, boiler-makers, helpers and other persons; and the American cost of production of steel ingots 6 feet long, 2 feet wide and 1 1/2 feet thick and weighing 4 gross tons.

There were many columns touching on various other matters—but congress passed the $100,000,000 appropriation bill. When the statesmen at Paris finally complete that peace treaty, and it is submitted to the United States senate, the senate will undoubtedly fill many times 239 columns with more or less germane remarks, but they will no doubt finally ratify the peace league, if in their judgment a plan is presented to them which will not endanger the constitution of the United States nor embroil us in internal disagreements which are ever cropping out in the dozens of smaller countries of the world.

Nobody knows how much of the constitution of the league of nations is the work of President Wilson and how much is the work of other men of other nations. That is, nobody knows except the heads of the big five governments that are managing the conference and the members of the league of nations committee of which the president is chairman. And they are not telling.

It is just as well, too. For whether intentional or not, the fact that this document is a composite and practically anonymous work commends it to the various nations concerned far more than if it were known as the product of the one man's mind, or the contribution of one nation.

Of all the statesmen who have had to do with this league of nations plan, President Wilson is by common consent given most credit. But no man maintains that he wrote it, any more than any single man wrote the constitution of the United States. It may be that he had no complete plan of his own. It may be that he was too shrewd to offer a definite plan, knowing that such a move would invite antagonism.

It is agreed that in the actual realization of the idea, the working out of the details required to turn the conception into a concrete and practicable plan, many men have collaborated—how many it will never be possible to say. No doubt General Smuts of South Africa made notable contributions. So did Leon Bourgeois of France. So, we may add, did W. H. Taft, long the foremost advocate of a league of nations in America. Lloyd George has helped greatly. Clemenceau has helped by keen criticism.

Had Elephants Break Step. It is a tradition among newspaper men—and one that may be founded on fact—that in the old days when Barnum's elephants were marched across the Brooklyn bridge, in the quiet hours before daybreak, the keepers were instructed to prevent the huge animals from keeping step lest the superposition of strong vibrations might injure the structure.
