BEER AND POLITICS

President Wilson's request that war-time prohibition, insofar as it relates to wine and beer, be repealed, has caused consternation in prohibition ranks...

Prohibitionists assert that Wilson's action is a colossal blunder, as undiplomatic as his request that voters return a democratic congress...

renewed hope of regaining control of American politics. They believe Wilson has put a club in the hands of anti-prohibitionists...

The time was ill chosen for such a move as our president has made, and to say the least, he has given the whiskey element new fighting strength and raised their hopes...

Billy Sunday, who has always been "four-square" with the president has turned against him; he feels that he has been betrayed. But possibly the president goes on the theory that it is only whiskey, and not wine and beer...

So much for the prohibitionists' view of Wilson's appeal for the brewers. Now then as to the independent thinker; that great mass of voters who, for the good of the nation, believe in keeping a finger on the political pulse to keep fanatics from carrying matters to either extreme...

one of the greatest politicians of modern times—one whose tact and ephemeral phrases appeal to the human heart. Along with the republicans they see the erection of a mighty political fence. They believe the administration is, by having catered to and raised the wages of the 400,000 members of the brotherhood of railway trainmen...

But regardless of views and theories, Wilson's action at this critical time was a mistake; a breach of faith as grave to those who supported him as was his "slap" at republican fathers and mothers of our fighting Yanks when he stated plainly that senators and representatives of their choosing were not welcome at Washington...

The president's request was justly answered—a republican congress was returned.

Political fences are being constructed and well-laid schemes will come thick and fast until the next election, in the face of which it behooves every voter to keep strict tab on men in the national limelight for the next year.

Saturday's Medford Mail Tribune

contained an article, and an answer, on irrigation for the Rogue River valley. The Tribune is strong for irrigation but stated that the article would end the controversy over irrigation so far as it was concerned. The answer was by F. J. Newman, who put up arguments why irrigation is not needed in that part of the Rogue River valley...

Governor Olcott estimates that by the end of the 1919 season 80,000 automobiles will have been registered in Oregon. At an average price of $1,000 per car, which would be reasonable, that means that $80,000,000 of this state's money has gone East—never to return.
