THE DANGER POINT
FOR ALL BATTERIES

One thing that a good many automobile owners can't understand about batteries is the way they hang on and keep giving service right up to the minute when they refuse to work at all.

"These folks reason," says Mr. A. V. Hazleton, local Willard Service Station Dealer, "that the light ought to get a little weaker and start a little slower until the battery gradually wears out."

"Sometimes a battery acts that way, but another one may keep right on working until it is actually ready to fall to pieces. When the cells are opened up for inspection, the active material is in some cases so broken up that it will not hold together. This may be due either to old age or abuse. Of course, we never open up a battery without the owner's consent, but a battery in this condition could not last a great while and might go out of service at any time on the road."

"Most car owners are anxious to know the truth about their batteries and prefer to have a brand new battery when they know their old one is approaching the deadline." 87
