ALASKANS COME DOWN TO DESPISED PENNY

Douglas, Alaska, June 20—"What would the old pioneers of this land of gold say if they saw a friend coming in from a trip to the mines with a poke of dust, walking up to a bar, ordering an ice cream soda and paying for it with four nickles and a rusty penny?" Douglas "sourdoughs" asked when news reached here that pennies would be put into circulation in Alaska to enable residents to pay the government's tax on so called luxuries.

Lowly copper pennies, which have long been curiosities in Alaska where they were never even given the name or dignity of "chicken feed" are slowly being brought into use in the northern territory, much to the disgust of the "old timers." Time was, the "sourdoughs" say, when the 25-cent or "two bit" piece was the smallest coin used in all Alaska. At this day in the interior of the territory dimes and nickels are seldom seen.
