DEATH STILL LURKS

One of the pathetic sights still to be seen in Belgium and France is the posters everywhere, warning children against playing with bombs, grenades or odd bits of ammunition which they may come across in their wanderings.

Now another distressing phase of war's aftermath has appeared to add to the burden already so heavy in those unhappy countries. Thousands of horses and cattle have died suddenly while grazing over lands where poison gasses had been used.

If in the face of all their discouragements and setbacks, these people can still go on, rebuilding, farming, raising their cattle, it is a tribute to human courage equal to anything the war has shown.

More than this, it is further evidence of the far-reaching cruelty of this great conflict, when people must fight against such odds long after their country is at peace, and it is one more reason why the aggressive spirit of Germany must be brought to dust.

THE FINEST CLUB OF ALL

There have been clubs without number organized within the last two or three years to encourage boys and girls and their elders to raise better crops and produce more and better results for their labors.

Nobody can grow old gracefully who forecasts future worries, or who indulges in bitterness or vain regrets for past disappointments and failures.

The only way to accomplish this most desirable aim is to live each day courageously and kindly, to look forward to each tomorrow with serene confidence that it will bring something worth living for.

Growing old gracefully may begin right early; yet certain it is that youth lingers longest where age is least dreaded, while those who have for their ambition a beautiful old age will reap as their reward a harvest of golden years.

THE DEPARTING LINER

Each day sees some return to former conditions, some resumption of activity suspended because of the war. The other day in New York a great crowd of people stood on the docks and watched the great ship Mauretania set sail for Liverpool.

The Mauretania showed a passenger list of 561, most of these being persons bound abroad on business.

Little encouragement is given thus far to the mere sight-seeing tourist, but any one having a legitimate reason for going can procure his passport without difficulty.

It may seem like a long way from the docks at New York to the small inland towns of the United States; but the pebble has been thrown and the widening circles will not stop until they reach the edge of the pool. The wise man will be ready.

George Sylvester Viereck, the well known literary friend of the Huns, speaks of "our sister republic of Germany." Maybe a republic, George, but no sister of Uncle Sam's.
