THE NEW EXPERIMENT

John P. Frey, one of the most influential leaders of the American Federation of Labor, has been strongly urging that "workers be given a voice in the determination of their industrial fortunes." By this he means giving the employees of any concern a place on the board of directors or other governing body, and letting them cooperate with the employers in determining working conditions, wages and the policies of the industry in general.

Mr. Frey was asked whether he thought the organized workers, if they were "taken into the business" so to speak, and given a chance to examine the books and help run things, would not take a selfish, one-sided attitude. "Would they be willing, for example, to abide by the result of hard times as well as in prosperous times? Would they accept cuts in wages, when profits go down, just as they would demand raises when profits went up?"

"Positively yes," he answered. "By the very fact of the employer granting a position of partnership in industry to his employe, the latter is given a sense of loyalty which he did not feel before.

"He will stand the gaff as well as the employer. If I did not believe this I would not believe in the future of America. If the character of any concern's employes is such, as regards intelligence and fairness, that they will not be good sports alike in good times and bad times, then the workers of this country are not worth bothering about."

Many other labor leaders take the same position. Their views are said to be corroborated by the conduct of the workmen in various concerns where such a policy has already been adopted.

The plan as yet is still new. It has such strong support, however, from clear-headed thinkers of all classes, and is winning its way so rapidly in practice, that it will soon be possible to discuss the matter from the standpoint of actual experience.

It seems quite in keeping with the American idea of democracy, and surely will work in America, where the spirit of fair play is so strong, if it will work anywhere.

If it does work, it may prove to be the long-sought solution for the biggest of economic problems, ending the century-old warfare between capital and labor.

QUALITY AND SERVICE

THE WILY TURK

While the Germans hide and delay and protest, the Turks are quietly going ahead with the trial, conviction and sentence of the leaders responsible for the Turkish conduct during the war.

Enver Pasha and two other governmental heads have been sentenced to death by the court martial. Many lesser officials have been given long prison terms at hard labor.

The Turk is a wily person. Undoubtedly the present Turkish government understands fully that attending to the punishment of the guilty is one of the steps most likely to win favorable consideration from the allied powers. Also the Turkish people do not relish having been led astray. Whether they appreciate the moral quality involved might be a question, but they do know that they are in a bad way and that their leaders are responsible. For that reason, if no other, they punish the leaders.

Whatever the motive which has led Turkey to take matters into her own hands, the result is a good thing. A thousand complications are avoided, the way is cleared for the new regime, and future persons aspiring to leadership in the land of the crescent will think carefully before determining in which direction to lead their people.

A little of the same saving common sense on the part of the Germans would go far toward re-establishing that people in the eyes of the world.

ROYAL CIGARET CASES

A recent advertisement in the German papers offers a reward for the return of 13 silver, 14 gold and one gold-plated cigaret cases stolen from the crown prince's palace during the November revolution.

This is an eloquent testimonial to Frederick's loyal love of his own country. Long before November there had been a request made to all Germans to turn over to the government all gold and silver trinkets and jewelry to help the German financial situation. In commenting on the evident failure of his loyal highness to comply with the request, one paper remarks: "Here is another evidence of how little the 'nobles of the nation' cared about rules that should have been sacred to every German heart."

And yet they want to save the Hohenzollerns!

The American war debt, after deducting the amount loaned to the allies and the amount paid by taxation last year and this year, is about $12,000,000,000. New York state alone could pay that, if it had to, without being crushed by the burden. And as a matter of fact, New York will pay about half of it.

If this modern craze for tunnel-construction keeps on, one of these times we may have a tunnel dug straight through the earth, to give the shortest and quickest route to the other side. And then what will they run through it—trains or elevators?

Says Dr. Muller, German foreign minister, addressing the national assembly: "We are about to enter upon a forty-years' march through the desert." Well, it's pretty dry over here, too.

They say a rich Frenchman who died lately made his fortune out of used corks. Which doesn't sound so surprising, when you think how many fortunes have been spent on corks.

"THE SQUAW MAN" NOW ENTIRELY NEW PLAY

It was nearly five years ago that Cecil B. De Mille produced Edwin Milton Royle's play, "The Squaw Man," as a Lasky picture. It then created something of an epoch in the annals of motion picture history. Such a famous play had never before been attempted and its richness in drama and its varied setting gave Mr. DeMille the opportunity to develop his art along lines before unheard of. Today this director comes forth with another "The Squaw Man," an entirely new picture, produced with an all-star cast and surpassing in dramatic effect and scenic investiture the first production. It is this picture that the management of the Joy theatre has booked for two days, beginning on Wednesday of this week.

The story of "The Squaw Man" has become a classic in the history of the stage and its repetition here is not necessary. Mention of the cast however, is imperative. Never before to our recollection, has such an array of talent been assembled to interpret the roles in a single picture. Elliot Dexter has the title part and Ann Little is the squaw. Theodore Roberts is Big Bill, Edwin Stevens is the sheriff, Jack Holt is Cash Hawkins, Tully Marshall is Sir John Applegate. There is not a role, be it ever so small, allotted to a player at all mediocre.

Mr. DeMille has surpassed himself in the production of "The Squaw Man." He has derived the utmost from the Royle play and, if patrons remember the initial production, it will be interesting indeed to compare the two. Remember, "The Squaw Man" is not a reissue.

ASHLAND COMES UP LOADED FOR BEAR

Ashland decided to take the game. She came down here well supplied with material and began by taking one run and shutting out Grants Pass in the first inning Sunday, and two and a shut-out in the second, then one and another shut-out in the third inning.

The fourth and fifth innings resulted in goose eggs for both sides, but oh, how Ashland blew up in the sixth when Grants Pass on three hits, one sacrifice and four errors put the game on the shelf, and "Piano Legs" Pernoll took the hump and shutout Ashland one, two, three.

The big league exhibition of pitching occurred in the eighth when Pernoll delivered only nine balls in the entire inning, eight of which were fanned at, the ninth being an easy grounder to himself which ended the inning. During the three innings pitched by Pernoll only two men got on first base, but they were put out on account of going to bed. It was the best game of the entire season played on the home grounds.

Wilson, of the U. of O., who pitched for Ashland, allowed eight hits, while Ashland got six hits from Cornell and only one from Pernoll. The weather was hot and there was only a small crowd present. The score stood, Grants Pass 7, Ashland 4. Hits, Grants Pass 8, Ashland 7.

Ashland promises another game within the next few weeks. They voiced their intention of continuing to try until they have shown Grants Pass that she can be beaten. It is evident that it is Ashland's intention to win a game from Grants Pass or break their necks in the effort, therefore the next game between these two teams will be the best of the season.
