How to Get Good Kodak Pictures

- By learning your kodak or camera.
- By being instructed by us how to use it.
- By not taking the advice of amateur friends who know their own camera, but not yours.
- By having your films developed and printed by us.
- By getting pointers from us if you do your own work.
- By learning why your bad pictures are not good.
- By loading your kodak with EASTMAN films.
- By bringing your Kodak troubles to us.

Today Telephone Properties Are Returned

After a year of Federal control the telephone property, which makes up the Bell telephone system, is today returned to its owners by the United States Government.

While the property has been properly maintained, it is not the same property which the Government took over on August 1, 1918. It is not as adequate for its job or as well manned as it was; that it is not in no way the fault of Federal control which was eminently fair. It is due to causes for which neither the Government nor the Companies are to blame. A year ago today we were at war. Labor and materials needed for both telephone operation and construction were turned to military uses. Such materials were so vital to the carrying on of the war that even the work of providing telephone facilities for the Government was retarded and no part of them could be spared for the commercial telephone purposes. No less vital was the Government need for those skilled to create, maintain and operate the vast inter-communication systems necessary in modern warfare and in the conduct of the vastly increased Government services.

Thousands of telephone men were already at the battle front. Thousands more were under arms, and still telephone experts and skilled operators went into the service of the Government and contributory industries by the tens of thousands. The reserves of plant and equipment were drawn upon until they were entirely used up, and the experienced staff was gradually depleted. To find others to take the place of those who had gone was difficult; to train them takes time. During the year came Victory and the armistice, and instantly the business world sprang into intense activity. The demands for telephone service passed all former records. To replace the exhausted reserves which had been carried for just such purposes and to replace the skilled forces to meet this unprecedented emergency there began a rush for construction, for readjustment, for high pressure repairs, for feverish extensions. All these must be continued with increasing effort. The return of the property comes in the very midst of this race between an overpowering demand and an upbuilding of a system whose growth was held back and whose forces were scattered by the vital needs of war.

Much progress has been made in the upbuilding of this system, but far more is still required to meet the swift growth of business; and also to give "First aid" to every other business and every other service struggling against an unprecedented demand. The prosperity which creates this emergency in service creates also a scarcity of those desiring employment in the service. Under such conditions telephone service generally has not been and could not be up to the pre-war standard. It is beyond human power to immediately overcome the handicap which the situation imposes. There are no people in any public or private endeavor who are working more tirelessly or strenuously for the common good than those of the telephone companies. Service has always been given, more of it must be given, and it must be improved. That improvement in some cases will take months. Eventually service must win the race with demand.
