Meteorites of Great Age.
Meteorites of indicated great age, are not found in museum collections, and it is suggested that such specimens may disintegrate and disappear from the rocks within a relatively short time after falling.
The British Museum, however, has acquired a slice weighing somewhat less than a pound from a meteorite iron that is believed to represent an ancient fall, says the Newark News. The slice is from one of two similar masses that were found in January, 1905, within a few miles of Dawson, Klondike, and that, from their position in the oldest gravels of the district, are thought to have rested there since the Pliocene age.

TREE HELD BODY 57 YEARS

Servant, Who Hid From Soldiers in 1862, Was Unable to Escape.
In August, 1862, Jean La Rue, a servant of Edward Gleek, a farmer living near LeSueur, Minn., disappeared when he and other farm employees became frightened by the appearance of soldiers. His body, now mummified, was found recently in a hollow white oak tree which was cut down by employees of Gleek.
That La Rue became fastened in the tree is shown by his diary, under date of August 29, 1862, which stated the man could not get out and directed that if ever found all his money was to go to his mother, who lived in France.

OUR DOUGHBOYS DELIVERED GOODS

Australian Commander in Chief
Lauds Americans.

THEY MADE GOOD EVERY TIME

General Monash Calls His Men and Americans "Full Blood Brothers" After 1918 Fighting—Praises Work of Yanks in Battle of Hamel, Which He Declares Was Turning Point of War—Won Much Glory.

Australian and American soldiers are "full blood brothers," in the opinion of Lieut. Gen. Sir John Monash, commander in chief of the Australian forces in the war, because the Americans were never placed in any position, nor called upon to perform any duty, when, as the general expressed it, they did not "deliver the goods."

General Monash said he first reached this conclusion in the early dawn of July 4, 1918, when for the first time Australian troops, fighting side by side with the Americans in the Somme sector, won the battle of Hamel and gave to the allied arms the first success they had achieved since the Germans began their memorable advance on March 21.

"This battle was the turning point of the war," said General Monash. "It was a brilliant and unqualified success, and its effect upon the morale both of the enemy and of our own men was electric and startling. It became the model of all subsequent achievements in France, and it paved the way for the great counter-offensive in August."

Thirty-third Division Men.
The American troops engaged, the general said, were 1,000 men from the Thirty-third division, commanded by Gen. John Bell. The Thirty-third division was then undergoing training. General Monash said he had asked and obtained permission to employ 1,000 of the Americans in the battle of Hamel, but on the eve of the battle the permission was withdrawn.

"I passed a strenuous and exciting period of two hours," continued General Monash. "So far as I could learn the order originated in some misunderstanding at American general headquarters as to the state of preparedness for battle of this division."

"I could not afford to have my battle plans ruined at the last moment by the withdrawal of a large fraction of my assaulting infantry, so I went to my army commander and delivered an ultimatum: If the Americans were not allowed to remain in the order of battle then the battle in the morning would be off. Unless a decision was given by six o'clock that night the battle would go on with the Americans in it as planned. We managed to interest the commander in chief, and he gave the order 'carry on.'"

Won Much Glory.
"Those 1,000 Americans covered themselves with glory, and I can pay them no greater compliment than by saying that from that day on our Australian veterans took them to their hearts as full-blooded brothers."

General Monash had under his command in the closing days of the war, the whole Second American army corps, more than 60,000 men of the Twenty-seventh and Thirtieth American divisions. This army, he said, overthrew the Hindenburg defense system at its "most strongly defended point." The share of the American divisions in these operations was characterized by General Monash as "probably the greatest single American feat of arms achieved in the whole war." The operations were completed on October 5, he said, and it was on that night that "the Germans threw up the sponge and declared their willingness to make peace on our own terms."

FOR CONTROL OF WHEAT PEST

Hessian Fly Can Be Held in Check by Plowing Infested Stubble in Summer or Fall.

For the control of the Hessian fly, plow under deeply all infested wheat stubble during summer or early fall, where this is practicable and does not interfere with the growing of clover or important forage grasses. If volunteer wheat starts, kill it by disking or plowing while it is still young.

EARLY LAYING DISCOURAGED

Stunts Growth of Pullets and Tends to Production of Undesirable Small Eggs.

The pullet that lays very young is not as a rule the best layer; early laying stunts the growth, tends to the production of small eggs, and breeding from such pullets in time results in the production of an inferior strain of birds.
