STUDY THE CANDIDATES
Picking the man who is to make the race for the presidency of the United States is now a very different proposition from the manner of selection of a few years ago. Then the "fare was" that vague something of which so much was heard, was charged with hand-picking the candidate. Good men usually came out of this selection, for it was nothing less than a sieve for even the "interests" to pick one who would not be a winner. The preferential primary, however, gives the people a say in the matter of selection, and it forces the man who thinks he would like to go down in history as a Washington or a McKinley or a Wilson, as his thought may tend, to hold himself up to the full glare of the public gaze.

The woods are full of these sacrifices upon the altar of public service. Now that men can nominate themselves for the highest office in the gift of the world, it is easy to get into the race for the presidency, and there are some of those who are now in the race, or who think they are, who should and will be properly shelved when the shelving time comes. The general public should give earnest thought to these candidates for the public favor, for soon they will be called upon to name their choice, and their action will be reflected in the national convention, which will after all only approve the public thought.

There is a duty for all of us at the present time. That duty is the study of the candidates and the casting of our preferential vote wisely and intelligently. The primary election is the important election. It means more than the general election to follow. And what is said of the race for the presidency is also true all down the line, even to the most modest office in the list.

in a ten round bout at 145 lbs. Both men are confident and in excellent condition.

Boxers for the preliminaries have been working hard during the past month and will give a good account of themselves. It is anticipated that some good laughs will be extracted from the preliminaries.

This is a good bill and lovers of good, clean sport should be present.
