THE VICE PRESIDENCY

In the activity attending a campaign for the nomination of a candidate for the presidency of the United States, the voters lose sight apparently of the fact that it is quite necessary to name a proper person for the second place upon the ticket. A few adventurers now seek the nomination for the vice presidency, but the office does not attract the men who would fill the office most acceptably, and who could meet the emergency if they were called upon to succeed to the presidency. We have at the present time an example of a good fellow in the vice presidency, but a man nevertheless who does not even place a presidential estimate upon his own abilities. He stated at one time that if Wilson should be removed from his office he would himself resign rather than take over the duties and the responsibilities of the position. And no doubt the public would rather he would resign, though it would not be a great strain upon an intellect to make as good in the position as the present incumbent has made.

The duty of selecting the men who are to serve the country as its president and vice president during the next four-year term will certainly devolve upon the republican party. It has much excellent timber to draw its candidate for the chief position from, and in making this selection it should also keep the second position in mind. Men who have courted a presidential hope do not like the thought of the second position. But it is that kind of a man who ought to be nominated and elected to the vice presidency. Geography has much influence upon the selection of candidates, and that is one of the reasons why the Kansas statesman does not loom higher in the discussion of the candidates. Governor Allen would make a good president, and he is most available as a candidate for the second place if he would accept it. And no doubt he would if the call came from the people.

OIL LOCATORS STAKE OUT ALASKAN CLAIMS

Seattle, Wash., April 1.—Hundreds of oil claims, embracing thousands of acres of land along the Alaskan coast, from Mount St. Elias on the western boundary line of Yukon territory to the Alaska Peninsula in the west, have been staked by locators in the few weeks since President Wilson signed the coal and oil land leasing measure, according to reports from Seward, Cordova, Anchorage and other cities in the north. News of the bill's signing, eagerly awaited for weeks, started a stampede that "old timers" said rivaled the gold rushes of earlier days. Seward stamperders flocked to the oil regions of the Kenai peninsula, to Cold Bay, on Shelikof strait and to other districts along the Southwestern coast. From Cordova, the rush was in the direction of Katalla and Yakataga, at the bases of the Bering and Malaspina glaciers.

Elaborate preparations had been made to relay words that the bill had been signed. At Kodiak, locators were notified by wireless from Seward, and left in gas boats that had been chartered for weeks, bound for the oil regions. Cordovans, also, had kept high powered launches, under charter that no time might be lost in making locations.

While many indications of rich oil deposits had been found along the coast, the only development of any importance had been at Katalla, where an "English company" drilled into oil and secured a fractional claim of about 34 acres. Discouraged by conservation orders from Washington, the company, after expending nearly half a million dollars in drilling and development, abandoned work and sold out to a holding company. A number of wells upon the one patented claim have been producing oil since 1912, the product being chiefly distillate used by fishing boats.

Football Men Banquet—
The men who played on the high school and American Legion football teams last New Years were present at a banquet given for them at the Josephine hotel last night. A six-course dinner was placed before the 23 men who were able to be present. The knocks and bruises received during the game were more than made up for by the food that was placed before them. The banquet consisted of everything from cocktails to cigars with plenty in between.
