A FARMER'S VIEWS

The Courier has stated many times in its discussion of the irrigation of the valley lands, the thought that when the main project is completed each individual land owner has an engineering project of his own for solution. The district project will bring water within reach, but the land owner must clear and level his lands and distribute the water over it. With water once flowing in the ditches the land must pay the water tax whether it is producing or not, and naturally the owner can not afford to maintain it in a non-producing condition.

Bearing upon this subject, a subscriber writes the editor suggesting that some action be taken for the organization of a company or for the interesting of individuals in the clearing of lands upon a large scale and by contract. Few land owners are in a position to clear lands either economically or with the speed that is going to be necessary to subdue the thousands of acres that must be put in a producing condition within the next few months. This subscriber, himself a farmer, calls special attention to the land leveling problem, for to use water with economy the land must be properly leveled. Our correspondent says: "The average rancher would rather hire, or let by contract to some responsible person or company, the work of leveling and getting his land ready for water than to go to the expense of buying power and equipment to do the work himself. I would for my part. I think that if some one will look into this proposition he will find that there are more acres to be leveled than can be done by one outfit, but that all who want to go into the business can find employment. Where there is one acre already cleared and leveled there are 100 acres that must be made ready for the water, and what is needed is to make every acre take water. I would suggest the use of tractor outfits, as I think they would be most economical."

This is a live subject, and one that will have to be met without delay.

ENCOURAGING H. C. L.

A new slant on prevailing high prices was given by a manufacturer of women's clothing at a public forum meeting recently. He asserted that people were afraid of low-priced goods and asked for "more expensive" things simply because they had come to believe that it was necessary to pay a high price in order to secure good quality. "The retailer must keep his prices up in order to make sales," he said.

This is a pitiful picture, indeed, and wrings the heart with sympathy for the retailer whose goods are so misunderstood.

It is also a stern comment on the purchasing public. That public talks a good deal about high prices and speaks bitterly of particular instances in which it believes it has been unnecessarily "rouged." With protests and complaints still on their lips these buyers, and particularly the women buyers, go forth and buy a lot of foolish things, up-to-the-minute styles and luxuries which they could easily do without. Because everybody talks about the scandalous price of shoes, many women hesitate to buy a pair for less than $18. It just isn't done and they are afraid to be the first to ask for a plainer shoe at less money.

"Twenty dollars for a hat," one woman exclaims. "I never paid more than $12 in my life." Then the subtle tempter, H. C. L. talk, reminds her that this is the day of exorbitant prices. Everything is high. And with a sigh she pays the $20 when she could have acquired a perfectly satisfactory hat for less money.

If men and women both would talk a little less about high prices and try a little harder to find the good and useful things which can still be purchased at fair and reasonable prices, they would do themselves and the public—including the would-be honest retailer—a good turn.

OBITUARY

J. D. Fry

J. D. Fry was born at Bideford, England, February 20, 1851, and died in San Diego, Cal., March 27, 1920, at the age of 69 years 1 month 7 days.

He came to this country in 1871, settling first at Junction City, Kan., from whence he moved to British Columbia where he was active in business for two years. In 1889 he settled at Grants Pass, Ore., where he spent the remainder of his life. December 27, 1882, he was married to Irene Grizzle of Larene, Spokane county, Washington territory, to which union were born two sons.

The deceased showed a lively interest in public affairs and took a prominent part in all progressive activities. He was connected with the First National Bank of this city for 25 years, having, during this period served successively in the capacity of cashier, president and director, which latter office he held at the time of his death.

He was a member of the Methodist church South for 25 years.

Three years ago he was stricken with apoplexy from the effects of which he has been a constant sufferer. It was hoped he might finally recover and be spared to his loved ones but this was not to be.

He leaves to mourn his loss a wife, two sons, William and Thomas Fry, of Grants Pass; a brother, Capt. Wm. Fry, of Liverpool, England; two sisters in Bideford, England, and one sister at Gulph, Canada, also two grandchildren.

FEDERAL
DOUBLE CABLE BASE TIRES

They Give More Miles

FEDERALS are not only better equipped to stand punishment from the road but also from the rim.

The exclusive Double-Cable-Base feature frees Federal Tires from internal rim troubles.

Four twisted steel cables hold Federal Tires firmly on the rim; keep them from shifting, rocking, blowing off or the toe bead pinching the tube.

This prevents rim cuts and blow outs just above the rim.

Thousands of Federal users are proving this every day.

Federals could be economizing for you, but not unless you have them on your car. Let us tell you more about Federal Tires and why they save money.
