WATER EVERYWHERE
The Ancient Mariner cried out in his agony "Water, water everywhere, and not a drop to drink," and through his crazed eyes saw strange phantoms which did not exist except in the fancy.

Is there any need to go further with this thought before a public which has for years looked upon the millions of gallons of pure life-giving mountain water rushing to the sea, which with diversion to right and left from its green banks would have brought forth bounteous produce for the Rogue River valley. For many years has the Ancient Mariner of the Rogue held forth his ever-anxious hands for the strange phantoms which his fancy told him were before his eyes. "Water!" has been the cry, and as each summer has gradually worn on, and the crops of spring are mere memories, the cry has been a cry of agony.

Today there is no phantom. The water runs in the ditches and more ditches are daily completed for more water.

"A drop on the land is worth two in the river."

KNEE DEEP IN JUNE

In yesterday's issue of one of the Portland dailies, an editorial writer inadvertently remarked "tomorrow will be the first day of summer," apparently forgetful of the fact that the calendar demands that three weeks shall pass in the month of June before summer is officially present.

But before any reader believes this is a reprimand for such a slip, let us agree thoroughly and completely with the writer in Portland. Evidently he was speaking of real, genuine summer, and not mere official summer. We have with us today, ladies and gentlemen of the Rogue River valley, full-fledged, "knee-deep in June" summer. We in Oregon must not be held too closely to the conventional divisions of the calendar, which, after all, is intended for the purposes and uses of those who reside in the more common-places and drab geographic divisions of America, known more simply as "the rest of the country."

If Riley had been born in Oregon, and particularly in our part of Oregon, the nation would have lost that master-piece, "Knee-Deep in June," for we are barely started in June when we find ourselves "knee-deep." Today is June the first, and the first day of summer—on the Oregon calendar.

In this respect Southern Oregon is indeed particularly fortunate. In the interim between the fever of local politics and the hectic interest of national politics, we still have a glorious subject to talk about; we have the climate—and who will censure us for talking about it?

Died This Morning—
Albert E. Tuttle died this morning at 3 o'clock at the home of Guy V. Wetherbee at the fish hatchery about four miles above Wilderville. He had returned a few days ago from Klamath Falls where he was stricken with bronchial pneumonia, this being the cause of death. He had resided near here for the past 11 years as he had taken up a homestead. No relatives are known, and if anyone knows of any relative it is asked that they communicate with L. B. Hall.
