Beautiful Roman Fountain.

The Piazza di Treve in Rome is so revered by the natives that they have always had a saying, "He who drinks of its waters will again come to Rome." The fountain occupies as much space as many a temple, filling as it does the entire open space of the square. Its lofty columns, high entablatures and great arched niches in which stand various mythological figures, are its crowning features. In the central niche is a colossal Neptune and below him are sea horses over which pour and splash in many streams a river of water from one basin to another, finally spreading out in a broad expanse like a lake.
