RUNNING THE COUNTRY

Two American writers of note selected the same title for a book of enthusiasm in relation to the organization and growth of the American Legion, and the title each took was "Running the Country."

The attitude of a number of professional politicians has been one of contempt toward this organization, but if the advice of Tarkington and Nicholson, in the following, is accepted, the tune will change:

"When the recruits were gathering upon the training grounds, orators told them that after the war the soldier would 'run the country.' In response to this information, the recruit uttered the word, 'Guff!' in a strictly unimpressed tone of voice.

"Nevertheless, we know that for many years after the Civil war, the former soldier did run the country. But the country did not come to the soldier and say, 'Please run me.' Nothing can be accomplished except by organization. The recruit of 1917 or 1918 can 'run the country' and can 'run it right' if he wants to; for the organization is offered him in the American Legion. The time to join is now."

—BOOTH TARKINGTON.

"Every man who wore the American uniform should be enrolled in the American Legion. The business of war is done; the obligations of American citizenship continue and are unending. The ideals of the Legion are the highest and in planning the organization, Commander D'Olier and his comrades have shown the loftiest conception of America's aims.

"The stronger the American Legion, the more zealous its membership in teaching by precept and example the spirit of the Americanism of Washington and Lincoln, the greater the power of the nation itself to combat perils and stand foursquare to all the world.

"Many devices are constantly discussed looking to the elevation of the tone of American citizenship and the more perfect nationalization of America. No agency could with greater propriety undertake this work than the Legion. The men who dared their all for America have a right to set a standard by which Americanism shall be judged.

"The Legion is performing a great public service in strengthening America's lines of defense in times of peace. The realization of its program calls for the earnest participation of all those who touched elbows in camp and on the battlefield; the splendid youth who served America because they loved America."

—MEREDITH NICHOLSON

PROJECT PLAN EXPLAINED

the proceeding with the gravity project.

Chairman Smith, of the board of directors, presided at the meeting, and he and Directors Hamilton and Feldmaier made brief addresses, in response to questions, that left no doubt in the minds of their auditors as to their position in the conduct of the work of the district. Each director stated that every contract awarded for work must be upon the basis of merit, and that no contractor had any edge over others who wished to bid upon any of the work.

The bond election will be held tomorrow, the voting place to be at the Rogue River Valley Grange hall, with the polls open from 8 in the morning till 5 in the evening. The engineering force of the district has been working night and day in the past weeks to get the plans perfected so that they will be ready for submission to the state engineer for his approval Monday with the voting of the bonds. Once the plan is approved by the state, the directors can ask for bids for the construction of the project, and before the end of July work should be under way.
