SHEEP RAISING IS PICTURED

Film Shows Treatment of Flock at Culling Time in Fall and on to Selling of Lambs.

A motion picture film dealing with sheep on the farm has recently been completed by the film laboratories of the United States department of agriculture in co-operation with the bureau of animal industry. The film is now available for use by county agents, county or state sheep-breeder's association, agricultural colleges, and other department or co-operative workers or agencies.

The film is in three sections and four reels. About 45 minutes is required for the showing of the whole production.

The subject treated in the first and second reel is a year with the flock on the farm, beginning in the fall at the time that the ewe flock should be culled prior to breeding, and carrying it on through until the lambs are sold. Each seasonal practice is brought out and educational points are featured. The third reel deals with the co-operative marketing of wool and lambs, and the fourth reel with the slaughtering of a mutton sheep, dressing the carcass, and then cutting it up for meat consumption.

MEAT SUPPLIES FOR FAMILY

Greater Portion of Pork Products Used by Farmers Are Produced on Home Farm.

Nearly two-thirds of the meat eaten on the farm is pork, the average farm consumption of pork being over 500 pounds per family. The greater portion of the pork products used by farmers are produced on the home farm. A small number of pigs can be raised cheaply, says the United States department of agriculture. Kitchen and garden wastes, and sometimes dairy by-products, are available for feed. The farmer usually kills the hogs and dresses them on his own place. The hog furnishes a good variety of meat and also lard. The smoke house, a common improvement on the farm, provides a convenient way for curing pork.

SHEEP BUSINESS PROFITABLE

Study Being Made of Specialized Raising With Complete Reliance on Forage Crops.

Results of a farm sheep experiment reported by the United States department of agriculture show clearly the possibility of a profitable sheep-raising business upon eastern lands. At the government farm, Beltsville, Md., a study is being made of specialized intensive sheep raising with complete reliance upon forage crops for summer pasturage.

In 1916 a 30-acre area did not produce forage enough to feed satisfactorily 44 Southdown ewes and 23 lambs. This field is now capable of furnishing sufficient summer feed for 100 ewes with their lambs. The in-provement is due in part to the application of manures, lime, and phosphates, but chiefly to the fact that leguminous crops were largely used and all crops were fed upon the ground. Under the system followed forage crops are seeded in rotation and the sheep are allowed such frequent changes of pasture as are necessary to prevent troubles from parasites.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Practically all range-bred lambs are docked and castrated.

Hogs on pasture are not so liable to be troubled with intestinal worms and are usually in a thrifty condition.

Horses' teeth demand an examination at least once a year. As the horse gets some age, his teeth need rasping often.

The success of the hog business hinges on the fact that the most economical gains are made when the pig is in a growing condition.

The calf will start to eat grain when about two weeks old and, it is a good idea to start out with ground oats, barley or corn meal and wheat bran.

First Fossil Skeleton Mounted.

The genus megatherium, the largest of the ground sloth family, was the first fossil skeleton ever to be mounted. Nearly two centuries ago a Spanish colonist in the vice royalty of Buenos Aires, now the Argentine Republic, discovered the huge skeleton of an animal on the river Leyan, a few miles from the city. The skeleton was sent to Madrid and later mounted and is still seen in the Royal museum. Since then numerous skeletons of these animals have been found in both North and South America. The megatherium was 25 feet long from tip to tip. He was a fearsome animal to look at, but is believed to have been harmless and to have been domesticated. It is estimated that the first Americans milked these mammals, and that one milking netted as much as that given by ten good Jersey cows.—Scientific American.

The Price of Thorns.

A rose, lifting its proud head to heaven and glowing in its beauty, plunged its sharp thorns into the hand that would pluck it. A pansy, smilingly demure, thrust forth its head, eager for the loving hand that sought it. A girl—beautiful, proud, selfish—accepted the man who loved her and dilly-plunged the thorns of her proud selfishness into his laboriously pulsing heart. Another girl—smiling, demure—was plighted to wed by the man of her choice and daily their love grew and with it their happiness. For men and women are not unlike the flowers. The rose, more beautiful than the pansy by far, demands its price in blood. The pansy, innocent of thorns and shy, gives freely and devotedly its freshness and its life to him that loves.—Milwaukee Journal.
