COMPLAINT MADE BY COMMITTEE MEMBERS

It should be unnecessary to tell the owners of automobiles that the lawns at the city park are not there for parking purposes. In spite of repeated requests to park cars in the bare spots and roadways, the following cars were parked on the lawns last evening, when plenty of other space was available: Oregon numbers 22784, 94861, 78723, 6893, 19188, 53304, 65845, 57691, 51129; California, 430,377; Wyoming, 6929 and Colorado 160,541.
 The park superintendent is doing all in his power to keep the lawns green and smooth and the parking of cars on the lawns constitutes a trespass and a nuisance. No further warnings will be given, and owners of cars who deliberately trespass the rules of the park will be prosecuted and fined. As the park superintendent very aptly reminded some of the car owners, the sign "Keep Off the Grass" should be implanted in every one's brain.

LONDON MOURNS FOR ITS KIWI

Only Apteryx in England is No More—Wingless Bird is Believed Nearly Extinct.
 The total extinction in England of the kiwi (or apteryx) has become a reality. The London Daily Mail announces the death of the Regent's park zoo's only specimen. The species is nearly extinct in New Zealand now, but the British Zoological society has written to the New Zealand government asking if just one more kiwi can be spared from the island sanctuary. Zoologists will mourn the loss of the dwarf wingless ostrich more than the zoo visitors, for not one in ten thousand ever saw it while it lived there more than nine years. The keeper would turn out this queerest of birds every now and then, but the long-billed bundle of apathy and sleepiness scrambled back into its box as soon as released.

A curious point about the kiwi is the fact that its nostrils are at the tip of its long worm-hunting beak, and in the ardour of the chase it emits an unpleasant snuffling noise. Its mating call is a pig-like squeal.
 England is responsible for the virtual extinction of this rare bird. British ships brought rats to New Zealand, so weasels were sent to exterminate the rats. When they had nearly wiped out the kiwi, the New Zealand government found a ratless island and consecrated it to the poor bird. But the problem of saving an idiot bird that puts all its eggs into one shell, so to speak, was a difficult one. The kiwi laid one egg a season, nearly as big as itself. Exceptional mothers would lay two eggs and then find it almost impossible to hatch both, as the ends would project out beyond their feathers as they sat on them.

World's Future Lumber Producer.
 South Africa is now pointed out by a leading authority as one of the world's best fields for timber growing. The work, he says, must be done on a large scale by the government, as individuals cannot wait for the returns. Various kinds of pine are declared to be the trees most suitable. The variable winds exert such a twisting upon growing trees that straight-grained timber of certain kinds is difficult to obtain. Pine seems to withstand the contorting influence more effectively than other kinds, and very fine, straight-grained timber of this sort is produced.
