Energy in Clouds.

A cloud, though composed of water, is so light that it floats in the atmospheric ocean. It is made up of minute globules of water, each one of which has for its nucleus a particle of dust. The weight of a cloud measuring 10,000 feet in diameter would, it is estimated, be something like 200,000 tons, if its material were condensed. The material has been lifted into the sky by the power of the sun. One may observe the process in operation when one sees a "thunderhead" cloud mounting skyward on a summer day. Its rising speed averages more than 100 feet a minute, but the cloud goes up more slowly when it reaches a point where its top is cooled to the degrees of the surrounding air. The cloud assumes varying shapes as the transition takes place. Often the top of the thunderhead bursts out in surprisingly beautiful mushroom forms and stands in the sky like a vaporous toadstool reared as if by magic.

Teach Pleasant Ways.

Quite often really well-meaning children are disliked because of their habit of saying disagreeable things, truths perhaps, but still best left unsaid. Telling truths that hurt is the very surest and swiftest way to win an enemy and lose a friend, and the mother who neglects to add this caution to her "do's" and "don'ts" is leaving an important point neglected. If there is one inalienable birthright of a child it is love, and it is almost criminal negligence upon the part of that mother who allows some disagreeable trait to flourish until it has destroyed the little one's chance for affection and tenderness at the hands of the universe that, after all, judges so much by results, since it has not the time nor the patience to consider the cause.—Detroit News.

Two men, both strangers in the city, ruffled the calm and peacefulness of the morning when an exchange of blows followed their meeting on Sixth street. One of the men learned that the other had been paying attention to his wife while he was gone, and had sent forth the old western warning of "pull and start shooting" upon sight. Justice evidently was not yet awake, for the outraged husband came off but second best in the encounter.
