CONTROL INTESTINAL WORMS

Best Way is to Change Ground Upon Poultry Run, Especially if Fewer Are Crowded.

Changing the ground upon which poultry run is the best means of controlling intestinal worms in poultry, because the worms or eggs of the worm will stay over in the ground from one season to another, especially if the poultry is overcrowded.

POULTRY

GOOD FENCES ARE REQUIRED

Fowls Running at Large Destroy Gardens and Flower Beds—Confine Them in Yards.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Confine the back-yard flock; otherwise the hens will stray into neighbors' yards and gardens, where they may cause damage and are almost sure to cause ill feeling. The yard should be inclosed by a board or wire fence. Wire fencing is preferable, as it is cheaper and the hens are less likely to fly over it, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. If cats prove troublesome where one is raising chickens, it may be necessary to cover the top of the yard with wire also. A board should not be used at the top of a wire fence, as this gives the hens a visible place to alight and tends to teach them to fly over.

A 5-foot fence is high enough for most conditions, but if the hens show a tendency to fly over such a fence the flight feathers of one wing should be clipped. Leghorns need a 6-foot fence. The larger the yard which can be provided the better the hens will do, as it not only gives them greater opportunity to exercise, but also makes it possible to maintain a sod on the yard. In most cases not enough land will be available so that a sod can be maintained.

If the yard is fairly large, it can be divided into two parts and green crops, such as oats, wheat, rye, or Dwarf Essex rape allowed to start in one yard while the hens are confined to the other. The green crops should be sown very thick, and the following quantities will be found satisfactory for a yard 25 by 30 feet: Wheat, 2½ pounds; oats, 1½ pounds; rye, 3¼ pounds; rape, 5 ounces. When the growing stuff reaches a height of 3 to 4 inches the hens can be turned upon it and the other yard be similarly sown.

Where it is inadvisable to divide the yard it is possible to keep a supply of green stuff growing by using a wooden frame 2 or 3 inches high covered with 1-inch-mesh wire. A frame made of 1 by 2-inch lumber, 6 feet long and 3 feet wide, with an additional piece across the center to support the wire when the hens stand on it, will be found desirable for a small yard. A part of the yard as large as this frame is spaded up and sown, the frame placed over it, and the material allowed to grow. As soon as the green sprouts reach the wire the hens
