GAME PROTECTION

A bill introduced in the legislature yesterday would put the funds derived from the sale of fish and game licenses in the general funds of the state and would make it necessary for the game commission to seek appropriations to continue its work. Quite a bit of opposition is being stirred up as the sportsmen feel that the money they pay in for licenses should go back, as far as possible, to the preservation and protection of the fish and game, rather than into the state treasury.

The license fees at the present time are high. The sportsmen do not mind the rates, if they know the money is to be used to the best advantage. Should this money go back into the state treasury and the fish and game commission be forced to depend upon what they can get from the legislature, it is felt that the game would suffer. It is being deplored too rapidly as it is, and no measures should be adopted which might jeopardize the sport. House Bill 219 should not be passed, in the interest of the sportsmen.

A communication in another column calls attention to the fact that the farmer should adopt a uniform pack. Recently a man bought a sack of potatoes from a farmer, for which he paid a higher price than was demanded for Yakima potatoes, because the farmer declared them to be of superior quality. Half of the sack was discarded because of the fact that they were sunburned and rotted. It is such things as that which makes it impossible for the farmer to keep his products moving at the top price. The best policy is an honest pack.

The Courier invites communications which may express the opinions of the readers of the paper. They should be short and to the point. All communications should bear the name of the writer or they will be withheld. Names will not be printed if the request is made. Poetry is not acceptable at any time.

A copy of the Corvallis Gazette-Times New Year's edition has recently come to the desk of the Courier editor. The paper deals with the year 1922 in Corvallis and shows the progress made by the college town. The paper reflects a prosperous community and is itself a credit to the community in which it is published.

One can bear rather chilly nights when there is a day of sunshine such as today to look forward to. Still it's the climate.

First High Heels.

According to books on costumes of the past centuries high heels were worn by women during the reign of Charles II in the fourteenth century. They seem to have attained their greatest height and popularity in the reign of Louis XIV and Louis XV of France. During the latter period dress accessories were greatly exaggerated, the headpiece being sometimes several feet in height and the width of the dresses and the height of the heels of shoes exaggerated accordingly. It is probable that the term "Louis" clung to the highest French heels for this reason.

LEGISLATORS ARE TAKEN OVER CAMPUS AT U.O.

University of Oregon, Eugene, Feb. 1.—(Special)—The University of Oregon's contribution to the state and the problems of the institution in the face of a rapidly increasing enrollment were discussed by President P. L. Campbell at an assembly held in the Woman's building yesterday in honor of the members of the state legislature. The university student body and staff gave a hearty welcome to the visitors. Responses to the greetings were made by Jay H. Upton, president of the senate, and C. C. Brownell, acting speaker of the house. Other speakers included Mrs. George T. Gerlinger, university regent, Mrs. C. B. Simmons, representative from Multnomah county, was presented.

In the course of his address, Senator Upton declared: "As long as I have a voice to raise, no worthy student striving to get an education will ever be deprived of the right to enter our higher institutions of learning."

Mr. Brownell, in the course of his remarks, commended the endowment campaign of the university, which aims to augment state support with private benefactions. The acting speaker regards this campaign as a farsighted one.

President Campbell enumerated the research contribution made to the state by the university. The school of education, for example, is engaged in public school surveys to determine the cost of education. The result of this research may be a recommendation which will lead to further economies in education. Eighteen million dollars was lost to the state of Oregon last year through disease which might have been prevented. The school of medicine is engaged in researches in preventive medicine to cut down this great loss. The speaker called attention to Prof. O. P. Stafford's process of converting mill waste into valuable by-products and a high grade of commercial charcoal.

"The University has consistently lived within its millage allowance," said President Campbell. "It has further absorbed all the new cost of its growth without going to the state for more millage funds, although there has been a 37 per cent increase in enrollment in the past two years. It is absorbing a millage loss from decreased valuation this year and it is endeavoring to finance part of a loss from last summer's fire which destroyed two of its buildings."

Gossip of Staff Correspondents at World Centers of Population

Berlin, Feb. 1.—(I. N. S.)—There is an idea prevalent in the States that an American has an easy time of it here. It is high time that idea is corrected.

Americans don't have an easy time of it here, or anywhere in Germany. Life is just one battle after another. You have to fight to get a place to live, to get a seat on a train—even to get your dollars changed into marks.

Above all, you have to fight to keep the amiable natives from separating you from your money. The owner of an American accent is a bright and shining target. Prices go up automatically when he appears, and change comes anywhere from a hundred to a thousand marks short.

It's uncanny how hotel and restaurant bills get added up wrong—always in excess, of course. And even more uncanny is the regularity with which the mistake occurs in the column where a mistake in addition of only one figure means a difference of a thousand marks.

This doesn't happen everywhere. There are places where a stiff price is charged all comers, Germans as well as Americans.

For a long while it was possible for Americans to live here in style for insignificant sums. Internal prices were low, and the dollar bought a lot of marks. Lately, however, the advance in prices has caught up with the depreciation of the mark, and prices continue to advance, even in the periods when the mark temporarily ceases to depreciate.

Wherefore a lot of Americans are faced with the necessity of increasing their incomes or revising their scale of living downward.

And now, to cap the climax, the German financial authorities are revising income taxes upward in such a radical fashion that all hands—including Americans—whose income is more than $10 per week will have to pay a 75 per cent tax.

The cause of all this nicking of Americans, of course, is that Germany and Germans are hard up. The country gets poorer and poorer every day, as regards material wealth. Deprived, under the treaty of Versailles, of much of its wealth-producing territory—the territory that yielded iron and coal—Germany is now consuming more than it produces. The Russian markets that once spelled prosperity are now gone, and with its productive powers seriously impaired by constant labor squabbles, Germany finances the purchase of essential foreign raw materials by the emission of paper money. Wherefore the mark falls lower and under the double influence of a depreciating currency and diminishing supply of commodities, prices keep on rising.

As a result of thinking about the vast number of marks that can be bought for a dollar, the German people have gotten the idea into their heads that money means nothing to Americans.

Not long ago an American newspaper man stationed here was approached by a German representing a jewelry concern which needed an additional half billion marks or so of capital.

"And what is a half billion marks to you, my dear sir?" exclaimed the German. "Only $5,000."

The American hasn't convinced the German yet that $5,000 is a lot of money.

The "curse of the dollar" has penetrated even into social life. An American circulating in German society is likely to be reminded twenty times a day that he belongs to the tribe of "dollar rich" Americans. The reminders range from plaintive recollections of the day when four marks equalled one dollar to only slightly veiled insults. As a result, many Americans living here avoid German company.

And these are only a few of the reasons why Americans in Berlin wear long faces.
