DIVERSIFIED INDUSTRIES

The value of diversified industries in any community can never be overestimated. This point was brought out clearly today in the report that the hop growers of the valley are bringing approximately $100,000 in this section for the country with their 1922 crop. In itself, the hop industry does not mean a great deal but alongside of the many other crops such as fruit, alfalfa and vegetables, it shows what can be done in a valley like the Rogue.

Suppose the hop crop had failed. These growers are not forced to depend upon their hops alone. They have orchards and large alfalfa acreage upon which they could fall back. The failure of any one crop through a sudden disease or pest, which struck unexpectedly, would not spell disaster for the whole community. In the wheat growing sections, a low price on wheat means that the whole community suffers. In a beef or sheep country, low meat prices have the same result. In the Rogue, where almost any crop can be grown, there will never be that dread of bad years.

A cannery, when such a plant shall be located here, will help to improve the situation. Any number of vegetables and small fruits are used for this purpose and all can be grown on the lands of the Rogue valley. The Eugene cannery last year disbursed among the farmers for their products just short of a million dollars. The products taken include cherries, cabbage, cauliflower, gooseberries, plums, prunes, peaches, pumpkins, raspberries, black caps, rhubarb, strawberries, squash, turnips, grapes, beans, beets, carrots, quinces, tomatoes and many other vegetables. There is not a single one of these that cannot be grown here with profit.

The swine and dairying industries are but two more of the many phases of farming which can be undertaken. When the Rogue valley comes into full production, hard times will be stranger to the community.

KIND OF LITERATURE WANTED

Burton willing to invest only if book would show how he could profit financially.
'May I have a few moments of your time?'
Burton looked up from his desk and beheld a smiling young man.
'I have here something which I feel sure you will be interested in. Something which ought to be in the hands of every business man in this city. Something which...'
'Just a minute,' Burton interrupted. 'What is this something?'
'Ah! Now we're getting along,' the young man enthused. 'I represent the Atlas Publishing company, and the article which I want to show to you is a book which...'
'No books,' Burton insisted shortly and firmly.
'But this is an unusual book!' the agent protested.
'They all are!' Burton observed.
'Buy this book and learn how to be your own lawyer,' the agent insisted.
'So that's it?' Burton asked. 'Well, young man, I will buy if you have a book that tells me how to be somebody else's lawyer. That's where the money is.' - Kansas City Star.

GENUINE 'BULL' DURHAM TOBACCO

Daily News Letter
Gossip of Staff Correspondents at World Centers of Population

Paris, Feb. 13.-(I. N. S.)-The Mont de Paris, on top of which is the famous old church of St. Genevieve, recently celebrated its annual pilgrimage. All day long faithful pilgrims were seen climbing the mount to pay solemn homage to the Saint and kneel before the richly decorated chapel in the church which contains the tomb of the holy protectress of Paris. It was a curious sight to watch the slow procession of people of all conditions of life passing in and out of the beautiful 16th century church. At nightfall the scene was particularly impressive when the little booths outside the church were lighted up, giving an additional touch of quaintness.

Rather than pay her rent, Mademoiselle Charlotte, of Angers, tore up a number of securities and set fire to her rooms. Another lot of securities and $0,000 francs in banknotes have just been found in the mattress of this queer 'miseress.'

Word comes that Moscow's hangman, after hanging 2,000 persons in two years, has seen fit to play the same trick on himself.

American tourists in Europe during the last year have dropped behind them about $700,000,000, according to the latest official reports. Of all the countries France has probably received the biggest plum. Prohibition, is thought to be one of the main reasons for the unusual amount of travel and money-spending; but then South America, which is by no means dry, is also contributing its full quota of globe-trotters, and in Paris cafes one is likely to hear as much Spanish as English.

Walking on water is possible by means of the new bootshoes a French inventor has just designed. They are fashioned after little torpedo boats, with an opening for the feet and little propellers on the sides. With the Seine ever on the rise, they are useful things for people who do not care to wet their feet.

One of the oldest known works of art has just been unearthed in a grotto at Lexpugne (Haute-Garonne). It is a statuette, about six inches high, made of ivory from a mammoth's tusk and is thought to be anywhere from 20,000 to 60,000 years of age. The figure represents a woman and was no doubt carved with sharp flints during the paleolithic period.

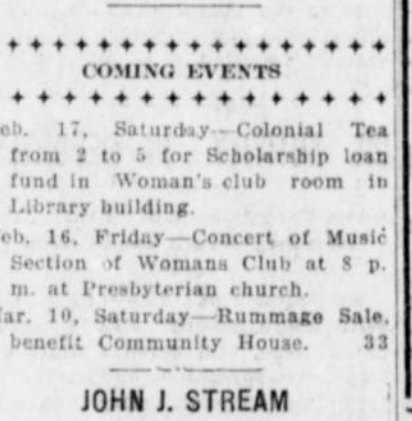

Sweet scent for the poor, as well as for the rich, is the motto of a well-known perfumer in Paris who has placed two original perfume fountains on either side of his smart boulevard shop. The precious liquid drops slowly from the open mouths of golden dolphins, and dainty midinettes, as well as tired old ladies, stop to partake of the fragrant refreshment.

BISHOP COMES OUT IN SPEECH FOR EXECUTION

London, Feb. 13.-(I. N. S.)-Capital punishment has found a champion in Bishop Weildon. Prejudice against capital punishment 'is not a prejudice justified by reason,' the bishop declares. Since the hanging of Mrs. Edith Thompson and Frederick Bywaters, convicted of the murder of Mrs. Thompson's husband, there has been a constant and growing agitation throughout England for the abolition of capital punishment. 'There seems to be an epidemic of crime,' said Bishop Weildon in discussing the agitation which is going on. 'It is probably due to the reaction of war. Society is bound to defend itself against malefactors. Old attacks upon capital punishment are being renewed, though the renewal is faint hearted. 'Looking at the most recent of all murders, I cannot escape the feeling that no punishment short of death would have satisfied the moral sense of righteousness in the heart of the nation. To take even a worse case, what other punishment could have proven even approximately equal to the crimes of a man like Landru? 'Moral indignation is a sound element in the life of the nation, nor can I doubt capital punishments acts as a deterrent to crime, not so much crimes committed under the sudden impulse of strong passion, but as making men and women hesitate before yielding to passions exciting them to murder. 'There has been a strong prejudice against the infliction of capital punishment upon women, but it is not a prejudice justified by reason. 'If women are capable of crime as bad as men the same punishment is due equally with men. They must be ready not only to enjoy the advantages but to accept the penalties of such equality. Bishop Weildon's defense of capital punishment for women, has caused a mild commotion in circles opposed to capital punishment, and numerous answers to his arguments have flooded the newspaper offices.
