OREGON WEATHER

Pacific Coast States: The outlook is for continued fair weather in California, except for considerable cloudiness near the coast, and for mostly cloudy weather with probably local rains in Washington and Oregon. Temperatures will continue near the normal.

NEED FOR ROAD WORK

It has been pointed out by the contractor who obtained the work on the last section of the Redwood highway, that traveling of the road from the O'Brien school house to the state line will be needed this fall if he is to continue to work during the winter.

The rocking of the 12-mile strip must be done eventually and with the grading now practically completed to a point two miles over the California line, there is no reason why the work should not proceed at once.

DAILY NEWS LETTER

Gossip of Staff Correspondents at World Centers of Population

Washington, July 21.—(I. N. S.)—The Democratic side of political Washington is ready for another Noah-size flood, half a dozen Thirty-Year Wars, or a second Black Plague, but not for another National Convention.

The Republicans are having Washington all to themselves these days. The Democrats are mostly confined to their rooms recovering from the recent hilarity in New York. They left here in June in frock coats and excellent physical condition, but as late as today they still have the frayed look of a collar that's been too often to the wrong kind of laundry.

A hundred and three ballots would get even Lionel Strongfort down on the mat.

Whatever conventions, may be called in the future will be entirely different from that in Madison Square Garden, if disgusted Democrats have their way.

For one thing, certain Democratic chieftains are preparing, at the next session of Congress, to have the hot dawg legislated out of existence. Hot dawgs were nearly all there was to eat in the Garden during the long sessions. "Hot dawg" now is a fighting phrase to a Democrat. So are "soda pop" fighting words. Try living for several weeks on wiener sausages and soda pop and see if you don't agree with the convention survivors.

It used to be the style for merry delegates to go to a convention, see all the shows, have a whoop of a time, nominate a Presidential candidate casually and go home and back to work.

Now, it seems one goes home to recover. There's much mulling to be done on the floor, with the thermometer forgetting to behave like a lady, and the air as stale as a Civil War bulletin from the front. A delegate that didn't play on the varsity eleven in his school days hasn't a chance.

It is being freely predicted around the capital that conventions are getting back to the days when knighthood was in flower and brave knights jousting in tournaments before fair ladies. The result of a convention is identical with that of a tournament—that knocked out feeling.

By the time the ninetieth ballot was reached 1,098 delegates were convinced that they rather would have seen Al Smith and William G. McAdoo fight it out with twelve-ounce gloves, broadswords, quarter-staves, maces, Gatling guns, or ten-inch lengths of gaspipe than with ceaseless ballots.

There is a lot of unfairness about these conventions, too. A grateful nation gives Congressional Medals of Honor to its soldiers, sailors and marines for such trifling things as capturing fifty of the enemy single-handed, sinking hostile dreadnaughts and licking superior numbers of the foe to a standstill, but what do you get for doing your bit in the conventions? An income tax assessment, due quarterly, at the most.

You can command no enthusiasm talking to Democrats about bigger and better conventions. But they'll jump up and cheer if you can figure out some way to hold fewer of them and then cancel them when they're due.

PROTECTION URGED FOR WILD BIRD LIFE

The July issue of The Volt, just off the press, contains one of the best stories on "Bird Life" which has been published for a long time. This unusual article has been prepared especially for the Copco publication by two well-known residents of the State of Oregon, William L. and Irene Finley of the National Association of Audubon Societies, who are recognized throughout the entire United States as authorities on the subject of "bird life."

Speaking of Mr. Finley, the editor of The Volt makes the following comment:

"Conversation of the rapidly disappearing wild life of this country, especially its birds, is Mr. Finley's life work. As a lecturer for the National Association of Audubon Societies of America, as a writer and photographer, he is a leader in his chosen field of endeavor. First of all an educator, he is also an entertainer of the first order; but it is the coming generations who will be most indebted to Naturalist Finley, for the unremitting battle he is waging in the interest of bird life in America."

In addition to the excellent story by the Finleys there is presented one of the most attractive collections of illustrations that has ever appeared in this unique publication. These photos, seventeen in number, were collected from a great many sources tell a picture story of bird life which is an education in itself.

All manner of wild fowl are portrayed in this "picture gallery" from a very young Caspian Tern to a full-fledged Cormorant. The haunts and habits of these "feathered folk" are covered in an entertaining manner in the accompanying subject matter and will no doubt prove a revelation to many who have not been familiar with the intimate side of bird life.

Referring to the wild fowl nurseries in Klamath county The Volt has to say as follows:

"The years to come will prove if our estimate of the value of these wildfowl refuges is correct. Nowhere else in the whole United States, save perhaps in inaccessible swamps or on islands along the shores of states bordering on the Gulf of Mexico, is there anything comparable with the refuges and breeding grounds of the Klamath Lake region. With the growing general interest in Nature study that is part of America's out-of-doors recreational movement, these bird nurseries are destined to delight thousands with whom the study of bird life is not professional."

"Meanwhile, this issue of The Volt affords its readers opportunity to indulge in an expedition, second-handed, to this wonderland, taken first-handed by the Finleys, whose writings and photographs of bird life have gained them more than a national reputation."

Boys Leave Tomorrow

The 30 boys who have signed up for the Boy Scout camp at Diamond lake will leave tomorrow morning for the camp, accompanied by Ted Cramer, scout master of Troop 1. The boys will be in camp for a week, under the direction of a regular scout executive. In addition to the ones listed previously, several others have signified their intention of going. These are Leslie Whitehouse, Lee Winetrot, Lewis Stidham, Oliver Acord, Dick Holst, Bee Kenyon, Cecil Harmon and Harry Barrell. All of Troop No. 1 were able to go without expense to themselves as the troop had made sufficient during the winter to finance the trip. Troop No. 2 members were forced to pay their own way and one scout was enabled to go through the donation of a local business man, who gave $5, the cost of the week.

Grading About Complete

The grading of the portion of the Redwood highway between Adams station and Patricks Creek is nearing completion, according to R. L. Thomas, engineer with the California highway commission, who has just returned from Del Norte county. This is a stretch of about nine miles, for which the contract was let by the federal government. Thomas believes it probable that the grading contract there will be finished next month, but this will not include bridge construction work. Work preparatory to the construction of the Klamath river bridge has been started, Thomas says. The building of the construction camp is under way, and contractors are about ready to begin work. The contractors are busy bringing in machinery and equipment to be used in the work.—Humboldt Standard.

Los Angeles, July 21.—(I. N. S.)—Melvin C. Nelson, self-styled "world's champion burglar" is waiting here to be taken to San Quentin Prison to begin a twenty-year term. Nelson claimed to have engaged in 1,500 robberies in all parts of the country.

Heralded Camera

The camera obscura was a device invented by Battista Porta, an eminent Italian physicist, about 1500 A. D., and was the forerunner of the camera. It consisted of a rectangular box, with a lens whose focal length was equal to the length and depth of the box. On the side of the box opposite to the lens was placed a plane reflector at an angle of 45 degrees. By this means the image of any object toward which the lens was directed was thrown upon a piece of ground glass on the top of the box, in an upright position. By this instrument objects could be viewed or sketched from, as in nature. Newton remodeled the camera obscura, and a new interest was taken in it when, by the invention of Daguerre in 1839, the pictures became "fixed."—Kansas City Star.

HOLDS HEAT TWELVE HOURS

My Eastman "Sibloco" Furnace gives twice the results I would ordinarily expect from any furnace. I have a two-story house and it heats evenly all over. The fire easily holds heat for twelve hours, which makes it easy for my wife to keep the house comfortable in the winter without continually firing the furnace. I cannot say too much for the "Sibloco."
