Recognizes Old Convict

Chief of Police McLane has a good memory for faces. Thirty years ago he was in San Quentin prison looking over the inmates. He saw one man, Pat Mohanegan, who impressed him forcibly. Today Chief McLane recognized the man, who was going under an assumed name. Last night a local resident complained that a drunken man was hanging around the neighborhood. The night officers arrested him and put him in the city jail to sober up. He said his name was Pat O'Neill. This morning, however, Chief McLane accosted him by his correct name, Mohanegan, at the age of 57, said he was right. The chief told him to get out of town at once and the order was obeyed.
