

AMUSEMENTS

Jack Holt Featured in New Paramount Film at Rivoli Tonight

Youth, in his romantic moments, dreamed of being shipwrecked on a desert isle, or lost in the wilderness, with a beautiful maiden!

Every desert isle is plentifully stocked with bananas and coconuts; any hiatus in the regular diet of the stranded couple is bridged with a liberal serving of tropical love and kisses!

But the actuality is vastly different in Paramount's "Empty Hands," featuring Jack Holt. He and a girl are cast adrift in the Northern wilderness, empty handed except for a penknife. They not only lack the most elementary tools and weapons, but also find themselves practically devoid of clothing.

Then begins a bare-handed struggle with nature to wrestle a shroud with nature to wrest from it the necessities of life. They are both highly civilized persons, but the advantage lies with the man, who has spent his life in the great outdoors, while the girl is the soft product of the cities.

The most romantic youth could ask for no finer thrill than this primeval struggle to live. The man wins the fight, as he has always done, but in saving the life of the woman, risks his own honor. With the fear of starvation removed, love comes to them, and the man finds himself with another fight on his hands which pales the other by comparison.
