Unfolding there was a fight against a disease that had claimed the lives of many, with a community joined arm in arm for the battle.

It was the Relay for Life, the fifth annual for Baker City and 25th overall year the American Cancer Society has held the event aimed at raising money for cancer research.

ONE YEAR AGO from the Baker City Herald July 27, 2018

Some Baker County ranchers worry that the Forest Service's recently unveiled long-term management plans for the three national forests in the Blue Mountains will lead to restrictions on cattle grazing on the forests, a vital source of forage for many ranches.

Although the revised plans, which were released to the public in late June, don't directly dictate what parts of the forests are open to grazing, the plans inform future decisions about specific grazing permits.

Carrie Matthews of Baker City is concerned about guidelines in the plans for the Wallowa-Whitman, Umatilla and Malheur national forests that call for restricting cattle grazing in areas near wolf dens or where wolves are known to "rendezvous."

Matthews said local ranchers have had their federal grazing allotments closed due to technicalities, and she fears the wolf language in the new plans will have the same effect.

MARKET

Johnston said that on a busy Wednesday the market attracts about 300 people per hour.

This year the Baker City Farmers Market is one of five that's part of the Oregon Farmers Market Association.

The Baker City event was also picked as one of five markets for the Oregon State University Research Project Beginning Vendors Support Network.

The OSU program looks to see how beginning vendors and established vendors use farmers market, such as getting their names out to the public or using it as their main source of income.

"It's an amazing program," Johnston said. "They teach market managers and board members how to help inspire our new vendors, how to help more established vendors if they're saying 'I'm not sure why my sales keep going up and down' and we can help them look at how is their marketing, how's their booth presented, things like that. Which makes me really excited."

Johnston said Baker City was chosen because "we are in such an economically depressed area" and OSU officials wanted to see how vendors do it out here.

"And usually it's by diversity of income streams," Johnston said.

She worked with the state farmers market group and OSU for several weeks to ensure strengthened privacy for the vendors in the market.

"I made this very clear; we have people here who have firsthand experience in privacy violation and I am not going to violate their privacy," Johnston said. "They don't want to be a name, they don't have to be a name. So we worked for three weeks to get this so my vendors could impart the information that needed to be imparted and have a sense of they were being respected for not being publicly consumed."

Among the vendors this Wednesday, a sunny and refreshingly cool day compared with the 99-degree Tuesday, was Tori Whiting, who sold homemade kettle corn she prepared in a large kettle near her booth.

Whiting, with her mother Kathi Vinson, offered original kettle corn and a new jalapeno flavor. Whiting has set up at the Baker City Farmers Market for about six years.

The mother-daughter team also sells their sweet, crunchy treat during the Fourth of July flea market at Sumpter, the upcoming Demolition Derby, and at private parties.

As is typical with farmers markets, some of the vendors Wednesday peddled their own homegrown produce. This included Logan Geddes of Baker City, who sold sweet onions, salad mixes, loose leaf teas, homemade candles and more.

Geddes has participated in the farmers market for three years and he also travels to La Grande for its farmers market.

Jennifer Banister of Jen's Garden also sold produce including microgreens, salad kits, carrots, living micros and others while her grandchildren made Italian sodas and frappés.

Banister has been doing the market around 17 years. She did take a break when moving out to Keating to prep the soil for her produce.

"We were there in the beginning of the market," Banister said. "We've been doing it for a very long time."

Banister also delivers produce to commercial accounts in Keating, Baker, Haines, North Powder, Union, La Grande and Pendleton. She also does personal deliveries.

Luke Gibson, executive director of the Baker County YMCA, also had a booth at the market for two Wednesdays.

Gibson worked to make people aware of what the YMCA offers and discussing its upcoming annual fundraising campaign from Sept. 10 to Oct. 31.

"Join Forces With the Y" is a fundraising drive that helps the YMCA's financial assistance program to help those who cannot afford to be in a sport, purchase a membership or rejoin the YMCA.

The booth offered a coloring page headlined "A Hero Is" and encouraging people to list the attributes that make a hero. The pages will be displayed around the YMCA.

"This is to show that it doesn't take much to be a hero," Gibson said. "It might just be to give of yourself, it might just be to be kind to someone who needs that gentle reminder that they're OK, it's just all being together as our community."

OBITUARIES

Elva Lloyd

Baker City, 1916-2019

Elva Ellen (DeBord) Lloyd, 102, died July 23, 2019, at Blue Mountain Care Center in Prairie City.

Her graveside service took place this morning at Mount Hope Cemetery with Pastor Dave Hoeffner of the Prairie Baptist Church in Prairie City and the Calvary Baptist Church in Baker City officiating.

Elva was born on Nov. 25, 1916, at Heath Idaho, on Brownlee Creek in the Snake River area, to George Lewis DeBord and Alice Bell Scouvier. When she was 6 or 7, the family moved to Richland. She was always proud of being a "Snake River Savage."

She married Roy Wright at 16 and had two daughters, Rosalie and Evelyn. They moved to Baker in 1938 but spent most of the time with Roy's mother and Orrie on their farm 13 miles below Robinette. They bought an old house in Baker on 15th Street which they turned into a cozy home. Elva lived there until she moved to the Blue Mountain Care Center in Prairie City in 2004.

Elva loved gardening and sewing clothes for the girls as well as cooking. She was known as a very good cook. She took care of Sharon, her niece, aged 2, for the duration of World War II.

Elva and Roy eventually divorced, and she was then married to Jack Lloyd for a short time. When her daughter Evelyn passed away she took care of her 4 children for a few years.

Elva is survived by her daughter, Rosalie Averett; her grandsons, Tom Averett (Sherry) and Dan Averett (Karla); her granddaughter, Cindy Anderson (Cody), and grandson, Tim Guillems; as well as numerous great-grandchildren and great-great-grandchildren.

Julie Berry

Baker City, 1954-2019

Julie Irene Berry, 64, of Baker City died July 21, 2019, at her home after a long valiant battle with cancer.

A private memorial will take place later.

Julie was born on Dec. 31, 1954, at Prairie City to Lois Faye Harvey (Wilson) and Phillips C Harvey. She was the second-oldest of 7 children. Julie was very young when her family moved to Portland, Maine, in 1959, where she went to elementary school. Then in 1967 her mother and the 7 kids moved back to Grant County. She always talked about her trip back to Oregon on the train with great detail and the beautiful dress that she wore the whole way back and how it had to be discarded because of it.

In 1971-72 she spent a school year in Seattle living with her aunt and went to Monroe High School. In 1972 she met her partner for life, Richard "Dick" Berry, and they were married on April 7, 1973. They proceeded to have 3 children, Shawn, Phillip and Adam.

In 2000, she moved to Baker City with her husband. She said she loved this area because she was closer to everything. Julie considered herself blessed to be "Grandma Care" for all her grandkids, whom she doted on immensely. She enjoyed her visits with her family and always had a story about one of her grandkids, either Grant, Jady, Isaac, Elijah or Brynn. Julie said once that she was cursed with only having boys in her house and then was blessed when Megan and Trista joined her family, because she confided in both of them immensely. Julie cherished her adventures in the Bourne area and treasured her scrapbooking time. She was a caring mother, loving wife and amazing grandmother!

Julie leaves behind her

Julie Berry

Julie was preceded in death by her parents, Lois and Phillips Harvey; her older sister, Melanie Harvey; and her brother, David Harvey.
