50 YEARS AGO from the Democrat-Herald February 20, 1971

The Baker Bulldogs made up for cold shooting last night with a tenacious defense and squeezed out a 34-32 victory over Redmond to preserve their conference lead.

A sigh went up in the Redmond gym as a desperation Panther shot rolled off the rim with six seconds left. Daryl Ross grabbed the rebound and iced the Baker victory with a last second free throw.

Bend developer Michael Tennant will submit his request to the Baker City Planning Commission Wednesday for a subdivision in West Baker City that would include residential, commercial and industrial parcels.

Last year planners gave Tennant, president of Columbia Developments Inc., tentative approval for his Settlers Park subdivision. The 74-acre property is just north of Campbell Street and just west of 17th Street.

Pending improvements to one current park and one fledgling park are on the Baker City Council's agenda Tuesday.

Michelle Owen, the city's public works director, will give councilors an update on work planned this summer at the Central Park.

That's the 2-acre property the city bought a decade ago beside the Powder River between Washington and Valley avenues.

ONE YEAR AGO from the Baker City Herald February 20, 2020

A state wildlife biologist concluded that wolves killed a Baker County rancher's 2-year-old bull and probably also killed a yearling steer last week in the snowbound Wal-Iowa Mountains northeast of Baker City.

Mib Dailey, who lives near Sparta, about 25 miles northeast of Baker City, said the bull and steer, along with two other bulls and one cow from his herd, had been stranded in the Eagle Creek area over the winter.

The animals didn't turn up last fall when he was gathering his herd from summer pasture in the mountains, where he runs 250 cow-calf pairs.

Dailey said he has been looking for the missing animals, and about a week ago he found them on the west side of Eagle Creek near Puzzle Creek. That's between Eagle Forks and Martin Bridge, about 2 miles north of Sparta.

Dailey said a friend had been hauling hay to the cattle using a side-by-side ATV, as the 30 or so inches of snow made it impossible to reach the area in a truck and trailer.

Dailey said he also brought in a bulldozer to plow some of the snow from a road, with the goal of leading the cattle back to a main road where he could load them in a trailer and drive them back to his ranch.

Dailey said his friend delivered hay to the cattle late in the afternoon of Feb. 12. All five animals were together at that time, Dailey said.

When his friend returned with more hay on Saturday, Feb. 15, he found the carcass of the steer and the 2-yearold bull with severe wounds.

CATS

"There were about 30 cats inside and maybe 50 cats outside," said Farrell Rilev-Hassmiller, the volunteer cat coordinator with Best Friends.

Groups working with Best Friends to help the cats and kittens are: New Hope for Eastern Oregon Animals, Blue Mountain Humane Society in La Grande, Pendleton Paws in Pendleton, Fuzzball Rescue and Cat Utopia in Hermiston, Oregon Humane Society in Portland, and Cat Adoption Team in Sherwood Oregon.

"It's amazing," Riley-Hassmiller said.

In addition to providing medical care to the cats that need it, Best Friends is seeking to spay and neuter the animals as quickly as possible to prevent further breeding and an increase in the colony's population.

Baker County is at a disadvantage as there is no shelter for cats locally.

"That's why most of these cats are going elsewhere," Riley-Hassmiller said. "We're

"As cats are going to the vet and going home, they're staying indoors. The caregiver's still attempting to socialize them more."

very fortunate to have that network and to be able to help."

Riley-Hassmiller said Best Friends is using vouchers from the Mollie Atwater Spay and Neuter Fund to help Dawn.

"We are providing vouchers, helping her (Dawn) with the trap effort," Riley-Hassmiller said.

New Hope had made a donation to an account in Dawn's name at the Animal Clinic of Baker.

Blue Mountain Humane Society was willing to take on all indoor cats at their facility as a holding space before sending them to the other rescue homes. The Humane Society will process the cats, check them for ringworm and pneumonia, and assess how social the cats are.

From there, a majority of the kittens were sent to Fuzzball Rescue. Several cats and kittens with ringworm were sent to Pendleton Paws and Cat Utopia.

The Cat Adoption Team in Sherwood, south of Portland, had agreed to take the cats and kittens who were positive for Feline Leukemia Virus (FeLV) and immunodeficiency (FIV), Riley-Hassmiller said.

The Oregon Humane Society agreed to take in the senior cats who are social, and the organization sent a truckload of donations including food, kennels, supplies and other items. The Oregon Humane Society plans to send another load of supplies.

"It's still a work in progress," Riley-Hassmiller said. "As cats are going to the vet and going home, they're staying indoors. The caregiver's still attempting to socialize them more."

Although the effort has raised $1,600, Riley-Hassmiller said another $1,200 is needed to deal with the entire Richland cat colony.

School in 1980. He and Johanna were married on Jan. 19, 2016. Barb Borello, a good friend of theirs, introduced them in 2014.

Thor began his career with the Department of Corrections at Snake River Correctional Institution as a correctional officer in 1995 and transferred to Powder River Correctional Facility in 2003. He had just celebrated 26 years with the department and was anxiously planning for retirement with his wife, Johanna.

Thor was well liked and respected by staff and adults in custody alike. His perpetual smile, sense of humor and nononsense attitude were just a few traits that served him well on and off the job. Thor spent many of his years at PRCF as a work crew supervisor and took great pride in the work that was done around Baker, Grant and Union counties. He used to say, "Every day is a good day when you get to be outside." He then moved to receiving and discharge so that he could be close by and take days off.

When his wife got cancer, then wrecked her motorcycle, other than that, no matter what the task, if it was assigned to Thor, it got done. He would simply say, "I'll take care of it," and you knew he would. Thor had a genuine interest in people and took every opportunity to make people laugh.

Thor enjoyed sailing, swimming and scuba diving in the Islands. He loved cave exploring and camping on his

on reconnaissance flights and fought on night patrols.

After four years of service and many awards, he returned home and took on a variety of jobs. He eventually went to work for Fleetwood Travel Trailers Inc., where he became an assistant manager. Years later, he was promoted to manager of a plant at San Bernardino, California. California did not appeal to Forrest, however, so he ultimately moved back to Oregon. about any plane. He owned and flew multiple ultralight airplanes, as well as a gyrocopter and experienced flying a glider at a sponsored event at the Madras Forrest also loved motorcycles. He rode dirt bikes, road bikes (Honda Gold Wing), and a sport bike (Honda Magna). He also taught his sons how to ride, who went on to teach their children, granddaughters included.

Another of Forrest's hobbies was building planes either from kits or from scratch out of balsa wood and covering the frame with Mylar. Once an engine was installed, he flew them by radio control.

Forrest had four children whom he adored, Tanya, Ashelee, Galen and Levi. Forrest was an avid reader and writer. He wrote an epic book of his life by hand, specifically for his children, giving each one a copy. This book is about 1,800+ pages and details his Vietnam experience, as well as his life and family. He also had folders of original poems that he had written over the years, which he shared with his friends and oldest granddaughter. Forrest was an accomplished writer, and has a book of stories and poems that are currently being published in La Grande.

Forrest cherished his grandchildren Before he became disabled, his favorite hobby was to enter every local parade from Baker City to Pendleton and beyond, driving a painted lawn mower pulling 10 large decorated lawn carts full of his grandchildren and local children, pets and stuffed animals. He won first place one year in Pendleton, and has had his picture in the paper many times.

Forrest is survived by his children, Tanya Galiszewski, Ashelee Cochran, Galen Green and Levi Cochran; his sisters, Ivalee Rodda of Pendleton and Janie Norvall of La Grande; and 12 grandchildren.

Forrest was preceded in death by his parents, Opal and Earl Green; his brother-in-law, Bill Rodda (Ivalee); his niece, Cami Baird (Marvin); and his beloved dog, Tucker.
