in a larger city.

“I had rolled ice cream in Tulsa, Oklahoma, a couple of years ago and I thought it was super cool so I started doing my research and I bought a machine and I just practiced and practiced,” she said. “Everyone has scooped ice cream, so we do this.”

Page spent much of her life in western New York, although part of her childhood was in Emmett, Idaho.

“After discovering Joseph last summer and spending time here, I fell in love with the area as a whole,” she said. “It’s obviously beautiful, but there is something about this county and the community that’s here that instantly made me feel at home, and I knew I was meant to do my business here.”

This is her first solo business venture, although she’s helped with the business side of her husband’s communications company. He’s currently working that in Virginia, but he will soon be here to stay. The couple of five years has three children, one of whom is with Page now. They now live in Wallowa.

Page is expecting to continue her current noon-to-8 p.m. hours until Oct. 1, but she hasn’t decided if she’ll close for the winter.

But she’s looking into ways to remain open during the cold months.

“I am planning to add sub sandwiches to the menu, so there’s a possibility we could go year-round,” she said. “We’ll just have to play it by ear.”
