what little water is left. The birds are either in the leave strips of grain or next to water, or transitioning between the two.

• California quail — Numbers are still down from years past but the brood sizes were good. Most are around the safety zone borders a few birds should be scattered around.

Grassland, fencerows, brush and areas adjacent to agricultural fields are good locations to key on - but don't overlook dry and receding wetlands. The wetland habitat provides more opportunity for pheasants than all the other areas combined.

All visitors, including hunters, must have in their possession a free daily permit to access the wildlife area. Permits will be available at self-check-in stations at entry points and parking lots. All visitors are required to have an ODFW Wildlife Area Parking Permit. Hunters receive a free parking permit with their hunting license. Parking permits are to be displayed on the vehicle dash. Learn more about ODFW's Wildlife Area Parking Permit Program.

Mild winter and spring conditions were likely good for production; however, the drought conditions throughout the summer may have impacted brood survival due to limited forage resources.

OUTDOORS & REC

In general, surveys for blue (dusky) and ruffed grouse indicate that blue grouse populations are still below the long-term average. Nevertheless, these species should provide fair opportunity into October, especially in more heavily forested areas in the Snake River Unit.

Chukar remain abundant in more arid areas, specifically in patches of cheatgrass above the Imnaha River and on vegetated slopes along the Wenaha and Grande Ronde rivers.
