

There's plenty to chew on after dinner with in-laws

DEAR ABBY ADVICE

DEAR ABBY: I once hosted a holiday dinner for which I had made a ham and a turkey with all the sides and three different pies. I even made a special mince pie for one of the guests. The guests — my brothers-in-law, my brother and his family of four and his mother-in-law — all showed up carrying empty Tupperware. At the end of the day, all I had left was dirty dishes.

The same family then invited me and my husband for a holiday dinner. My husband wasn't feeling well and couldn't go. When I asked my sister-in-law if I could take a plate home for him, she said, "Nope! If he doesn't want to come to the house, he can't have any of the food." Yes, Abby, she was serious.

My sister-in-law cooks the meat she received as a gift from her employer, and the rest of the guests prepare the sides and desserts. I never go empty-handed. At the end of the meal, she transfers any leftovers to their own Tupperware and gives us back the cleaned bowls. If I ask for a little of something to take home, she protects her leftovers like they were her children.

What's your take on leftovers? Is asking for a little fruit salad off limits? Is relieving your host of the burden of storing all of their leftovers out of line? Are there rules of etiquette here? — HOPING FOR A SANDWICH LATER

DEAR HOPING: If you would like the living, breathing definition of presumptuous guests and ungracious hosts, look no further than your in-laws' contact file. The fault, however, may not lie solely with them. If this has happened more than once and you cannot summon the courage to tell these greedy folks to put away their Tupperware and help with the dishes, you can't blame them for assuming you don't mind being imposed upon in this way.

As to the sister-in-law who refused to allow you to bring any of her food to your sick husband, I wouldn't blame you if you chose not to grace her table again after telling her the reason why.

DEAR ABBY: I am an adopted 17-year-old high school senior, and I live with four people who all have a disability. I want to move out when I'm 18 if I am able to. I have several older brothers and sisters, but they each have a family to take care of. My oldest brother is in his 60s, and my youngest in his 40s.

I don't want to seem selfish for wanting to live independently, but I don't know how to tell them. I don't know how to tell them anything because, in the past, they haven't listened to me. If you have any advice on how to tell them, I would be very grateful. — NERVOUS GIRL IN NEW YORK

DEAR NERVOUS GIRL: I wish you had mentioned when you will be turning 18, because at that point you will be legally entitled to live wherever you wish, and your parents and siblings will HAVE to "listen to you."

Because you are determined to move, it is crucial that you start preparing now. You will need to find a job so you can afford a security deposit and pay for rent, food, etc. You may also have to find roommates until you can afford a place that is all your own. A counselor at school may be able to guide you, particularly if you plan to continue your education.

MEMORIES

The metal catch to the creel's lid is missing and a "rolled" strip of leather designed to secure the shoulder strap has worn in two. There's a small gap across the front where strands of willow have worked loose. A quick inventory of required components shows the need for 6 inches of leather to replace the worn handle, 12 inches of half-inch wide strapping for buckling the shoulder harness, and 2 feet of strap leather to secure the creel around my waist. The brass buckles have patina and can be reused.

I've fashioned several personal objects from leather: cowhide belts, deer skin moccasins, and a leather scabbard for an 8-inch hunting knife — to name a few. I once built a western-style coffee table covered with cowhide scraps; each piece carefully cut to match. Restoring Grandpa's creel to good working condition is a welcome challenge. Cut leather to proper width and length, punch holes, attach snaps and rivets. That I can do.

The first order of business is to rub a liberal amount of Neatsfoot oil into badly cracked leather trim. I order a replacement shoulder strap with correct dimensions ($35 plus $10 shipping) from a fly shop in Wyoming. The brass buckle and tongue piece are salvaged from the original shoulder strap and a rear handle is fashioned from a short piece of rolled cowhide. The circa 1940 metal studs still function as if new. While not museum-quality, Grandpa's creel is ready for action.

The old fish basket is a basket of memories, a keeper of faith, a vessel of my hopes and dreams. With stream trout season soon in my headlights, I long to hike up a fern-shrouded trail, inhale the honey sweet fragrance of mock orange, and watch butterflies flutter around a trailside seep. I want to place a Royal Coachman Bucktail (Grandpa Harry's favorite pattern) where moss-covered boulders split the rush of swift current, set the hook on a pan-size "keeper," and shove it through the square opening of the creel's lid. The steady beat of the trout's tail against inside willow weave is sure to leave a sweet fragrance to remind of days gone by.

TURKEY

What to bring on the hunt

ODFW has a list of suggested gear for turkey hunters on its website — <https://myodfw.com/learn/collection/how-to-hunt-wild-turkey-in-oregon/skill/turkey-hunting-in-oregon>.

- A face mask or camouflage face paint. Turkeys have keen eyesight so you'll want to cover your entire face and neck with something camouflage that's comfortable to wear. Bowhunters often prefer camo face paint that won't get hung up in the bow string like some masks can.

- Gloves or camouflage paint for your hands. Same reason as above.

- Something to sit on. It could be a simple pad if you're shotgun hunting from in front of a tree, to a small stool if you're bowhunting from a ground blind.

- A ground blind to help hide any movement that might spook a turkey. Ground blinds are almost essential for beginning bowhunters. It's hard to draw back a bow without moving at least a little. At the same time, shotgun hunters also will enjoy the comfort and effectiveness of hunting from a ground blind.

- A pair of binoculars to spot turkeys, and to measure the length of their beards. Binoculars also can help you study the terrain and plan your next move.

- A rangefinder, if you're a bowhunter. When it comes to accuracy, knowing the distance to your target is critical. A decent rangefinder should be at the top of any bowhunter's check list.

- Proper clothing. This includes clothing appropriate for the weather, and a camouflage pattern that matches the seasonal vegetation, as well as comfortable, supportive boots.

Field dressing

All you need to gut a turkey is a simple pocket knife. Cut through the thin skin of the stomach from the bottom of the breastbone to the anus. Keep your cut shallow to avoid cutting into the internal organs. Open the body cavity by pulling the legs and thighs back and away from the breast muscles.

Next, grab the gizzard and remove it followed by a handful of other organs. Be sure to remove every bit of the lungs. They sit against the back, beneath a subcutaneous tissue that holds them tightly against the ribs and spine. You'll need to use your fingertip or fingernail to get between the ribs and under the lungs, so you can fully remove them.

Remove the heart and lower intestinal tract. If you want to save the heart, liver and gizzard put them in a sealable bag and get them in a cooler. Last, remove the trachea and esophagus. You might need to give them a good yank.

Once the body cavity is empty, let it air dry. Don't rinse it with water as that will promote bacteria growth. If you need to rinse away some blood, be sure to blot the turkey dry when you're done.

If you want to do any further butchering in the field, Oregon bird hunting regulations require at least the head or one fully-feathered wing remain attached to the turkey while in field or during transport.
