

Aging husband wants to screen potential suitors for his wife

DEAR ABBY ADVICE

DEAR ABBY: I am an old man, married to a wonderful woman who does everything for me. I'm in poor health and don't expect to live much longer. My wife is a youthful 80. She's trim, pretty, active, hard-working, loving and sexy. She enjoys skiing, fishing, gardening, board games, puzzles etc. She is the most organized person I have ever known. She likes to cook and entertain and is excellent at both. Although she has quite a few friends — widowed and otherwise — we don't know any men who would be acceptable as a future mate after I'm gone. She's financially independent and meticulous about keeping track of expenses. Neither of us is formally religious. To be blunt, I can't imagine a better wife for someone special. I would like us to meet a man, preferably in his 70s, preferably widowed, physically active, romantically inclined, energetic, capable with tools and household projects, not addicted to drugs or alcohol, financially independent and preferably politically conservative who would be a potential mate for her after I am gone. We have discussed this to a limited extent, but she has expressed little interest in the subject. I can't imagine she won't experience a renaissance after this albatross is off of her neck. She has more than earned it. If you have any suggestions, I would appreciate them. — THANKFUL IN WASHINGTON

DEAR THANKFUL: You are clearly a caring and protective husband who is deeply in love with and concerned for his wife. However, as much as you would like to screen the applicants to fill the vacancy that your death would create, there are some things a person must do for themselves. When you pass on, your wife may not feel ready to move on according to your timetable. Please let her make this decision for herself when the time is right. P.S. I am sorry you are not in better health, because it seems you and your wife have a strong and loving relationship that will not be easy to replace.

DEAR ABBY: My grandson is in a relationship with a girl who manipulates him and abuses him emotionally. I told my grandson what she is doing, but he doesn't see it. Because of that, neither one of them is speaking to me. My grandson was a caring, happy person until he met her. Now he's withdrawn. He is working, but she is not. They are struggling to make a life for themselves. When I ask how he's doing, he just says OK and nothing more. Is there anything I can do to make him see what she is doing to him? — IT'S OBVIOUS IN IOWA

DEAR OBVIOUS: No. You have done everything you can by trying to enlighten your grandson, who, it appears, "love" has blinded. Now it's time for you to accept that nothing will change until he wakes up and smells the coffee.

"Serving as a treasurer was greater than I ever could have thought possible. I knew it would be a great experience but I had no idea how amazing the year would be," said Dippold, a 2021 graduate of Imbler High School who served as state FFA treasurer from March of 2021 through March 21 of this year.

The many responsibilities of state FFA officers include putting on workshops for chapter members, meeting chapter members at their schools to promote FFA, working with current and potential sponsors, connecting business and industries with FFA and helping conduct the annual state FFA convention.

Dippold said the opportunity to meet and work with many remarkable people, some of whom he believes will be lifelong friends, are a big reason he will long treasure his year as an FFA officer. Dippold doubts he ever would have gotten deeply involved in FFA if he had not accepted an invitation from Cant to participate in the livestock judging competition in Corvallis six years ago. Dippold was a member of Imbler's FFA chapter at the time but was not active in it.

Dippold initially said he did want to go to Corvallis but Cant kept encouraging him to come. Finally Dippold agreed to take part in the competition. Today he views the event as a turning point. It sparked a passion for FFA that helped him become a state officer.

"That contest is what started everything for me," Dippold said. "I'm so thankful that J.D

kept insisting that I go to Corvallis."

He soon became a leader of the Imbler High School FFA chapter, helping keep it vibrant even during the height of the COVID-19 pandemic, according to Cant, who is still IHS's chapter adviser and the school's agriculture teacher.

Dippold and the other five state officers all played major roles in helping put on the 2022 state FFA convention, which was conducted in Redmond March 17-21. Each officer had to give several presentations at the convention.

Cant credits Dippold with giving some of the most compelling presentations.

"He drew students in," the adviser said.

Dippold did so by discussing how FFA has improved his life and the challenges he has overcome. These include a childhood accident that damaged one of his legs so seriously that doctors were forced to amputate a portion of it. Dippold told people at the convention that he learned to treat the injury like a speed bump, never letting it stop him from doing anything, including playing for Imbler High School's basketball program.

Cant said the inspiring way Dippold discussed the injury at the convention is an example of the young man's optimistic approach to hardship, noting that Dippold does not feel he has faced more adversity than most other people.

"He says that we all carry burdens," Cant said.

Imbler School District Superintendent Doug Hislop said Dippold is someone people look up to for at least two reasons, one is what he has accomplished in FFA, and the other is how he has dealt with the challenge of his leg injury.

"He is an inspiration to everybody," Hislop said.

Dippold, the son of Katie Dippold and Andy Pereria, will attend Eastern Oregon University in the fall and plans to earn an entrepreneurial agriculture degree.
