“Feud”

An eight-episode limited series from Ryan Murphy about the bitter hate-fest that went on between Bette Davis (Susan Sarandon) and Joan Crawford (Jessica Lange) while they co-starred in “What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?” has a sky-high potential for campiness, but what we get is far richer: a sympathetic portrait of two aging screen legends struggling to hang onto their careers. Catherine Zeta-Jones also stars.

“Movie: Minamata”

Johnny Depp gives a finely tuned performance in this 2020 drama movie in which he stars as 1970s war photographer W. Eugene Smith, who travels back to the titular Japanese city where he documents the devastating effects of mercury poisoning in coastal communities. Akiko Iwase and Kogorashi Wakasugi also star for director Andrew Levitas (“Lullaby”).

“Movie: The Bob's Burgers Movie”

Series creator Loren Bouchard wrote, produced and directed this feature-length film that finds the Belchers in emergency mode when a ruptured water main creates a giant sinkhole in front of Bob's Burgers, forcing the restaurant to close and jeopardizing the family's plans for a successful summer. The voice cast includes Kristen Schaal, H. Jon Benjamin, John Roberts and Dan Mintz. (ORIGINAL)

“American Horror Stories”

The spinoff of FX's popular “American Horror Story” anthology franchise created by Ryan Murphy and Brad Falchuk returns for its sophomore round with few details available, save for the fact that it will contain seven episodes that feature independent narratives that explore different terrifying myths and legends within the franchise.
