"Mendelssohn's Third Symphony is also known as 'Scottish Symphony' due to its incorporation of Scottish folk melodies," Kindle wrote in a press release. "The concerto will include yet-to-be-determined concerto work."

The annual Chamber Music Festival will take place in the Vert Clubroom (located in the basement of the Vert Auditorium) on Saturday, April 22, 2023. The festival features a variety of small ensembles performing chamber works with hors d'oeuvres and beverages provided by OES's volunteer board of directors.

Kindle said this concert is an optional addition to the season ticket package (an extra $20 for adults, seniors and students, and extra $80 for a family season pass).

The season will conclude Saturday, June 10, 2023, with "A Hero's Life" conducted by Benson.

Kindle said OES is programming works by contemporary African American composers in its symphonic programs this season to continue the symphony's commitment to diversity. The fall concert will feature Adolphus Hailstork's fanfare "Intrada," the spring concert Jessie Montgomery's "Strum," and the season finale featuring Felix Mendelssohn's "Symphony Planets," a work that heavily inspired Williams's score for "Star Wars."

The Holiday Music Festival, OES's annual ecumenical celebration of the holidays featuring a variety of community groups, is Sunday, Dec. 11. In addition to a performance by the symphony, under the direction of Assistant Conductor Zach Banks, this year's installment will feature the Pendleton Brass Quintet, Our Songs Are Alive from the Umatilla Indian Reservation, and Christmas carol singalongs by Adam Lange.

After a winter break, Benson returns on Saturday, March 11, 2023, to conduct the spring concert "Some Like It Scot!" featuring Felix Mendelssohn's "Symphony
