MYRTLE POINT NEWS

The basketball games played in the Oaks Pavilion Friday evening were a great success. Both games played were won by Myrtle Point, the Myrtle Point girls' team playing against Coquille was victorious by a score of five to ten, and the Myrtle Point boys playing against Coquille boys won by a score of nineteen to fifteen. A big crowd of the Coquille students came up to attend the game and the dance afterwards. Also a large crowd of the Myrtle Point rooters were present and the hall fairly rang with the cheers of both rooters. At the end of the first half of the boys' game the score was even to seven but all during the second half Myrtle Point kept in the lead. The game was a very close one and the people are anxious for the time to come when the game between Coquille and Myrtle Point will be played on Coquille's floor on February 19th.

Mrs. S. W. Hall, who has been nursing Mrs. Frank Burkholder of Coquille, who has been seriously ill for a long time, was up to Myrtle Point to visit her daughter, Mrs. Johnny Clinton, over the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Thompson entertained a number of their friends with a musical soiree at their home Tuesday evening. The evening was spent with music consisting of vocal and instrumental solos. Mrs. Thompson has a beautiful contralto voice and sang several selections in her pleasing way. At the close of the evening dainty refreshments were served. All returned home feeling well pleased with the entertainment and the pleasant evening spent.

East Fork Notes

To prove that the world is getting worse, Jimmy Laird sent me down a paper containing a statement of a Methodist preacher, a bishop, that this is an immoral age, that women do not dress modestly, and that crime is rampant. I wonder what he would have thought of the "age" in Noah's time. About woman's dress, I wonder if that preacher is old enough to remember when women wore a hump just below the small of their backs big enough to make a footman's seat and called it a bustle. I remember that day and do not have to imagine how they looked. Further back, I remember when women were walking hourglasses, when if they did not have anyone to cinch them up, it was said, they made fast the lacings of their corsets to the bedstead and took in the slack, as they seasawed back and forth to get the hourglass form. It is less than thirty years ago when it took more cloth to make the sleeves of a dress than it did the dress and women went around looking as though the hams of a mutton were hung on the wrong end of the sheep.

I have seen some bay window dresses, too, and would have forgotten all about it if a girl had not thrown up her hands when I described one. After traveling more than 6,000 miles, and any amount of sidetrips thrown in, whether it was summer resort, church, theatre, or school entertainment, I can truthfully say that I did not see any women who were not covered from their necks to their toes. I did see one at a high school entertainment at Westboro, Mass., who wore a slit in her dress running towards the small of her back. I did not get a front view, and what interested me was how she was going to scratch when a mosquito plugged her back.

Sure, I saw some rather thin waists, but those through which you could see pine squirrels less than 80 rods away were the exceptions and those exceptions proved the rule that the becomingness of women's dress is an absolute fact.

You remember a number of years ago there was a great hue and cry that the postoffice was rotten and that everybody connected with it was a thief; it was raked from garret to cellar with a fine tooth comb, and there were only seventeen crooks found in the entire post office department of the United States.

It is the same today. There are those who think that everybody who worked for the government was a thief. Hoover was accused of robbing the government through the grain commission; Charles Swab was accused of getting money from the ship commission and they were working for nothing—$1 a year—and bonding themselves. People did not believe the accusations, the great, big majority did not; and the charges were proven to be just as much dirt of the dirt dealer. Didn't anybody steal? Sure, but the thieves were few as compared with those who served faithfully. Was there ever a time before, when a man would make the attempt to raise $33,000,000 for starving children. That time is today. At the banquet in New York to the "invisible guest," as represented by a high chair, a million dollars were raised, and Hoover said then that one-half of the thirty-three millions was raised, and as I understand it, the other half has been raised since. If the world is not getting better, could that thing of raising $33,000,000 for the poor have been done? Anyone who could chip in on that and did not, is not proving that he lives to make the world better.

These are the biggest and best days the world ever saw. Disease-breeding mosquitoes breed on stagnant water, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey, and Russia, were the stagnant swamps and sloughs that bred the pestilential mosquitoes of hate and treachery, and today the world is contending with the fevers that those foul swamps of infamy and crime scattered broadcast throughout the world. Now the job is to drain these swamps and foul holes and clean out those death dealing mosquitoes, that the world may be a livable place in which to live. Mosquitoes don't drain their swamps and exterminate themselves; that is a job the Almighty left to man to find out how to do it. He found out. It is a man's job and the job will be done. The miasma of the mosquito will be exterminated. It may be the poison will become so great in the mosquito swamp that the
