Heroines of the South Seas.

Woman, her beauty and loving tenderness, is, next to nature, the great theme of South Sea literature. The early voyagers, who were indeed little sensitive to the charm of nature, felt to the full the appeal of woman. The first Spanish voyager to the Marquesas, Quiros, records that the women "had beautiful legs and hands, fine eyes, fair countenances, small waists and graceful forms, and some of them prettier than the ladies of Lima, who are famed for their beauty." Cook's chronicler admits that "all women in this part of the world are complete coquettes and that few among them fix any bound to their conversation; therefore it is no wonder that they have obtained the character of women of pleasure"—a conclusion against which he protests. From Oberea, queen of Tahiti, who, like Dido, lamented on the strand the departure of Captain Cook to the Faraway of Melville,

A very heathen in the carnal part.

Why Gaps in Railroad Tracks.

Steel car rails are subject to considerable contraction and expansion under the influence of extremes of heat and cold, the change of length of a 30-foot rail amounting to about three-quarters of an inch. It is this space between the rail ends which causes the clicking sound as a train moves rapidly along the track. This space is an absolutely vital factor in the safe operation of railways, for disaster would swiftly follow if the rails were laid and fastened with the ends fitting closely together.

Difficult Art.

"It was said by P. T. Barnum that the public likes to be humbugged." "It is true," replied Senator Sorghum. "But the humbugging has to be done by a man who made a profound study of it, as Barnum did, and even an expert can't succeed with the same trick more than once or twice."

Knowlton's Drug Store

HABIT OF SUFFERING

Pure suffering humanity is so accustomed to "take something" for every pain, ache or bodily ill that many are astonished to learn that osteopathy is applicable to diseases other than mechanical ills and injuries. Many express surprise to learn that it is the most uniformly successful of treatments for the infectious diseases. The explanation is not hard to find. Osteopathy adjusts and restores cures, and theoretically nature is believed capable of curing any and all diseases if only the right kind of assistance is afforded.

OSTEOPATHIC PHYSICIAN
Graduate of American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Mo.
